Mr. BATES, of Plymouth. The question on the occasion which has been referred to, was precisely what the question is here to-night. It was proposed that certain officers should be elected by a majority, until otherwise ordered by the legislature. That was the purport of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Boston. The gentleman from Framingham got up and said he gave notice that he should move an amendment, which was the very same as the amendment now before the Convention, only it went farther. Now, if it is proposed to leave the election of a part of the officers in the hands of a majority, unless otherwise directed by the legislature, I ask if the principle is not the same as when it was proposed to have all officers so elected, unless otherwise determined by the legislature? I presume it to be precisely the same. There is no escape for the gentleman; he need not squirm, or dodge. He comes in here, and argues against the amendment before the Convention, as a matter of principle; yet I have shown that in the very same page, or the one preceding that from which he has quoted, he proposes an amendment to leave this matter to be regulated by the legislature, precisely as the amendment of the gentleman from Walpole, now under discussion, proposes to leave it. There is no possible difference in the two cases; and it is useless for the gentleman to attempt an escape from his position, uncomfortable as it is.

Mr. TRAIN. My friend from Plymouth certainly misapprehended my ideas on this subject, or else I cannot read. The closing sentence is this:—

"If gentlemen are afraid to leave this matter to the people, I propose that they shall leave it to the legislature. Where they cannot go to the source, let them go as near to the fountain as they can: if we cannot get the people to pass upon the question, we will leave it in the hands of the legislature, and, therefore, I propose an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from North Brookfield, to this effect: That all civil officers whose election shall be provided for in the Constitution, may be elected by a majority or by a plurality, as the legislature shall hereafter determine. My idea is, that instead of leaving a portion of the officers to be elected by the legislature, as suggested by the member for North Brookfield, to leave the whole to the legislature."

I said, if we could not have the question of plurality submitted to the people, leave it, as the next best thing, to the legislature. Now, I want to have the Convention remember another thing, that my proposition, as well as that of the gentleman from Boston, was to leave to the legislature an open question. I would prefer to leave it to the people to say whether the elections should be by majority or plurality, and leave to the legislature to alter it if they choose to do it. Where, then, is the inconsistency which the gentleman thinks he has discovered?

Mr. HATHAWAY, of Freetown. I do not rise, at this late hour, for the purpose of making an argument. I do not know but we have fallen upon times similar to those we read of in the Good Book, when, to avoid much importunity, the unjust judge granted the prayer of the widow. There is no question that has been so much agitated here as this question of elections by plurality, since this Convention met. This has been the foremost of all, and it is likely to be the last.

Friday,] ELECTIONS BY PLURALITY, &c. — HATHAWAY — UPTON — PERKINS — HUBBARD — LIVERMORE. [July 29th.

There have been many matters introduced into the debate this evening that seemed to me to have very little to do with the question. Perhaps it is owing to the obtuseness of my perceptions that I do not see the force of the arguments that have been used. It has been said that we have tried the experiment in reference to our representation in congress. I had occasion to say, some time since, that that was a matter entirely beyond our reach; one with which neither we nor the people of Massachusetts had anything to do. It is a matter that is settled by the Constitution of the United States, which directs the legislature to prescribe the time, place, and manner of holding elections for members of congress. All that the people have to do with it, is to comply with the directions given by the legislature, to whom the Constitution of the United States has given this power. We have nothing to do in reference to putting in operation that part of the machinery of our government. That is already settled.

I have had occasion upon this question, heretofore, to say, in reference to a proposition that had been introduced here, that I did not understand quite so clearly as some of those associated with me do, or pretend to do, the precise nature of the proposition. I have asked several times for the reading of such propositions as were offered in the shape of amendments. Unfortunately, sometimes, I have not been accommodated. And I have made up my mind, long ago, that I would not ask for the reading of any proposition in future, but I meant always to vote on the safe side, by voting against any proposition that I did not understand. I would inquire of you, Sir, and I put it to every member of this Convention, how shall we stand, if we adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Walpole? If we look at the proposition as it originally stood, and at his proposition, we shall find a very great discrepancy—a very great inconsistency. The gentleman's proposition is, that until otherwise provided, the legislature may enact a law by which these officers may be elected by plurality; but the law shall not go into operation until one year from the date of its enactment. Then, if you look at the latter part of your constitutional law, where this provision comes in, you will find, that in case the individual voted for does not have a majority of all the votes given, he shall—not may—he shall be elected by a majority of the legislature, by viva voce vote—I mean as to the whole catalogue of officers there named. Well, now, what sort of patch-work is this? And yet, gentlemen would have us adopt this at midnight, and force it upon the people for their approval.

But I have another objection, and it has been adverted to by those who have spoken upon this question. It is this: You do not propose, under this amendment, to enact an organic law for the people to pass upon, but you propose to enact an organic law that the municipal corporations of this Commonwealth are to pass upon. And thus a majority of those municipal corporations, so far as their representation is concerned, is to make your Constitution.

Mr. UPTON, of Boston. When this debate commenced, I made a suggestion, in good faith, that the yeas and nays should not be called on ordering the previous question. Now, I am perfectly willing to forego any remarks I might desire to make upon the subject under discussion, if gentlemen will allow the question to be now taken on the first amendment. There must be an end to the debate, at some time or other, and it appears to me we had better close it now.

Mr. BIRD, of Walpole, accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Plymouth, as a modification of his own, and made a farther modification in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Boston.

Mr. PERKINS. It appears to me, that this subject has been pretty well argued, and that it is about time to put it to the people, and let us see how it will work. We have got rather a complicated proposition before us, and the longer it is considered and debated, the more complicated it becomes. I have always thought, until this evening, that I would vote for the amended Constitution. I do not say that I will not now; but let me tell gentlemen, that I doubt very much whether it will be accepted by the people. They will hardly be able to understand what it means.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Boston. I do not rise to make a speech, but merely wish to call the attention of the Convention to one single provision of the amendment, which seems to me a very objectionable one. I allude to the amendment of my colleague in regard to the repealing provision. Power is given to the legislature to adopt the plurality rule. The majority rule is to prevail, until otherwise provided. Now, my impression is, that having exercised the power once, they will have no farther control. The amendment of my colleague seems to me to be a highly objectionable feature. I should like to have it withdrawn from the control of the legislature. I therefore move that that part be stricken out.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question being on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Walpole, as modified, Mr. WEEKS asked for the yeas and nays.

They were not ordered.

The amendment was, upon a division—ayes, 77; noes, 62—adopted.

The question being on the final passage of the resolves, as amended,

Mr. TRAIN, of Framingham. I give notice that I wish to offer an amendment, but I do not wish to offer it at this late hour. Let it go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. LORD, of Salem. The mover of the amendment which has just been adopted, has found it necessary to make three or four alterations in his amendment; I therefore suggest, that it had better not be finally acted upon to-night, but that the vote be taken five minutes after the subject shall be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the proposition is a reasonable one, and if no one else makes the motion, I will move that the question on the final passage of the amended resolves, be taken at ten o'clock, on Friday morning.

Mr. DAVIS, of Plymouth. I hope the motion will not prevail. It has been the understanding, that if the debate was allowed to go on, the question might be taken to-night, on the amendment, and on the final passage of the resolves, without the yeas and nays, and many gentlemen have stayed here for that purpose.

Mr. TRAIN. The gentleman seems to think we are under an obligation to vote upon the final passage of these resolves to-night. If so, I for one, am willing to withdraw all opposition.

Mr. WHITNEY, of Conway. I think the proposition that we will take the question at ten o'clock, is a fair one, and for one, I am decidedly in favor of adjourning.

Mr. ELY, of Westfield, moved that the Convention adjourn.

The motion did not prevail.

The question was taken on the final passage of the resolves respectively, excepting the fourth, which had been amended by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Walpole, and they were passed.

Mr. BUTLER renewed his motion, that the question be taken on the final passage of the fourth resolve, as amended, this (Friday) morning at ten o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Reports from a Committee.

Mr. BATES, of Plymouth, from the Committee on Reporting and Printing, submitted two Reports, which, without being read, were placed upon the Orders of the Day.

Mr. OLIVER, of Lawrence, moved, that the Convention adjourn until half past eight o'clock.

Mr. CHURCHILL suggested that a great proportion of the members would not be apprized of the change of the hour of meeting.

Mr. OLIVER withdrew his motion, and moved that the Convention adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and the Convention, at half past one o'clock, adjourned until nine o'clock, A. M.

FRIDAY, July 29, 1853.

The Convention assembled pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by the President, at nine o'clock.

Prayer by the Chaplain.

The journal of yesterday was read by the Secretary.

Leave of Absence.

The PRESIDENT read a communication from Mr. Cogwell, of Dennis, asking for leave of absence, for the remainder of the session, on account of sickness in his family.

On motion by Mr. DAVIS, of Worcester, leave was granted.

The Pay Roll.

Mr. LIVERMORE, of Cambridge, from the Committee on the Pay Roll, reported the following order:—

Ordered, That the pay accounts of members, for attendance and travel, be made up, including Monday next.

Mr. LIVERMORE. I believe it is generally understood that this Convention can adjourn to-morrow, although it will, of course, be at a late hour, and not in season to enable members residing at a distance to reach their homes before

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, &c.—BATES—MORTON.

[July 29th.

Monday next. It is possible that our session may be protracted so as to include a part of the day on Monday. It is expected, however, that we can adjourn to-morrow night. But it must be perfectly understood, by all the members of this Convention, that some time is necessary for the Committee on the Pay Roll to make up the roll, which will embrace some four hundred and twenty names. I have offered this order at this time, in order to have the pay roll made up to-morrow in season to have a warrant drawn upon the treasury, by the Governor and Council, who, I understand, will be in session to-morrow afternoon, for that purpose. The order includes Monday next, because the members will, undoubtedly—most of them, at least—be detained here over Sunday, and cannot reach home until Monday. It is the usual custom, I believe, in the legislature, to make up the pay roll including Sunday, when they adjourn on Saturday.

The question being on the adoption of the order,

Mr. BATES, of Plymouth, moved to amend the same, by adding thereto the following words :

And no member shall be entitled to pay beyond that time.

The amendment was agreed to, and the order, as amended, was adopted.

Representation.

The Convention proceeded to the consideration of the Orders of the Day, the first item being the resolve submitted by the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) respecting the mode of submitting the question of representation to the people.

The resolve was read, as follows :—

Resolved, That the Committee "appointed to reduce such amendments as have been, or may be, agreed upon, to the form in which it will be proper to submit the same to the people, for ratification," be instructed so to prepare the amendments in relation to the House of Representatives, as to submit to the people the following questions :—

First. Shall the twelfth amendment in the present Constitution be abrogated ?

Second. Shall the system of representation by towns, in the form accepted by the Convention, be ratified and adopted as a substitute for the said twelfth amendment ?

Or, shall the system of representation by districts, in the form hereto subjoined, be ratified and adopted as a substitute for the twelfth amendment aforesaid ?

And if a majority of the legal voters voting thereon, shall be in favor of abrogating the said twelfth amendment, then the one of the two proposed systems of representation which shall receive the greatest number of votes, shall be deemed and taken to be ratified, and shall become a part of the Constitution, in lieu of the twelfth amendment of the present Constitution : provided, that if the two proposed systems shall receive an equal number of votes, then the system agreed upon by the Convention, shall be deemed and taken to be ratified, and shall become a part of the Constitution, as above stated.

[Proposed system of Representation by Districts, before referred to.]

The House of Representatives shall consist of two hundred and sixty-one members. Said members shall be apportioned among the several counties, as nearly as possible, according to the number of legal voters in each.

The Senate, at its first session after the ratification of this amendment, and at its first session after each decennial census, shall divide each county into such representative districts, composed of contiguous territory, as they may deem expedient, so that the basis of each representative shall be the same number of legal voters, as nearly as possible, without the division of towns, or the wards of cities : provided, that no district shall be so large as to entitle it to more than three representatives ; and provided, that Nantucket and Dukes County, shall each form one district, and be entitled to at least one representative.

Mr. MORTON, of Taunton. I will ask the attention of the Convention for a very short time. They may be sure I shall not detain them long—I would say less than fifteen minutes, but I believe it would be safer to go on and say what I have to say, in as few words as possible, without making any promise. It is impossible under the rule—and I do not object to it—to go into any argument upon the general subject ; and I will therefore state as briefly as possible, my reasons for presenting the resolve before the Convention, and leave the question to their consideration and decision, without going into any discussion of the principal matter.

I had hoped that this proposition would come up under rather more favorable auspices ; and I must confess, that at the present time there is but one unpropitious circumstance, that is, the lateness in the session, and the consequent necessary impatience of members.

I think there is much in the conciliatory tendency and fairness of the proposition to recommend it to the favorable consideration and the adoption of the Convention. I must hope that, even at this late period of the session, gentlemen will give me their attention upon this proposition for ten or fifteen minutes, and I have no doubt they will.

Mr. President : This resolve applies to the most interesting and important subject which has been before the Convention during its session, one which has been most fully discussed, maturely considered, and one upon which, as might be expected, there is very much difference of opinion. The various projects which have been offered, have been thoroughly investigated, and, I presume, every gentleman has made up his mind in relation to them. One project is founded upon town representation, and the other upon representation by districts. The advantages and disadvantages of these two systems have been fully examined ; and if they had not, I have no time to discuss them now.

There is a settled difference of opinion in relation to these systems, among the members of the Convention. A portion of them—the majority—are in favor of representation by towns ; and a minority—a respectable minority, in numbers at least—are in favor of representation by districts. There is, then, these settled and well-matured opinions, differing as they do, between these two sections of the Convention, which no one can expect to change. But, I hope, however, and believe, there is a disposition upon each side to conciliate and yield a little, for the purpose of bringing their opposing views nearer together. I will not say compromise, for it is a word I dislike ; it is sometimes used for proper and honest purposes, and then it is well enough ; but it is so often employed to cover up log-rolling intrigue and fraud, that I dislike very much to use it at all. I hope, however, there is a spirit of conciliation among us which will enable us to meet upon some neutral ground, without much yielding of opinion upon either side.

I suppose that every member of the Convention is willing that our constituents should have such a mode of representation as they like. It has been said that we here represent the whole people of the Commonwealth, and that we are, therefore, virtually an assembly of the whole people. I suppose in some sense that may be true, but in others it is not, because if it were, our decision upon the questions before us would be final. I maintain, therefore, that no decision of ours has directly, or by implication, or in any other way, indicated that the people would prefer the town system to the district system.

Now, I propose, by these resolves, to submit the whole question directly to the people. I suppose I may say, for both sides, that the members of the Convention are willing that the people should settle the question. I trust there is no gentleman present who would be disposed to say that we shall arbitrarily determine this question for the people. I suppose they are willing to allow the people to express their wishes upon the subject, and that a majority of the people should decide the question finally. If that is really the desire of the Convention—if they really wish the people to settle the question what system of representation they shall have, I have now presented a scheme by which that wish may be easily and fairly accomplished. Here is now an opportunity by which, so far as it is possible to accomplish it, every member can be exactly satisfied.

I am not tenacious as to the details of a system of representation, if it provides for an equal, righteous representation. But these two systems have been matured as far as we have been able, and I now desire that the people should have the opportunity of judging between the two, and of deciding whether they will have the district system or the town system. If this is not a reasonable proposition—if it is not one that will commend itself to every gentleman, and meet the wishes of every one, I certainly have mistaken their reasonable wishes, and the desires which all have earnestly professed.

It really seems to me, that if gentlemen wish to have the people judge of the relative merits of the two systems, here is an opportunity, which presents no obstacle in the way. The motion may be submitted to the people, and they can take town representation or district representation, just as they choose.

If gentlemen want the Convention to decide the matter finally, and to deprive the people of the opportunity of expressing their opinions upon the subject, they can do it by voting down this proposition, and by refusing to submit the question to them. If, on the other hand, we are really willing and desirous that our constituents all over the Commonwealth should be allowed to say yes or no to this proposition, why certainly we have now an opportunity to do it. I am at a loss to find any reasonable objection to such a proposition, and therefore I know of no argument to combat upon this subject.

But there are some things which I think specially commend these resolves to our favorable consideration and adoption. It does seem to me a measure of conciliation between the different sections of the Convention. It presents itself in that peculiar form that both the minority and the majority may be gratified. It is an instance, very rarely occurring, in which both sides may be successful. The minority would be satisfied with an opportunity of presenting their scheme to the people, and as the action of the Convention can avail nothing of itself, the majority should be satisfied with the same opportunity of presenting to the people their plan, with the indorsement of the adoption by the Convention. If the majority are willing that the people should express their minds upon the merits of the two systems, I see no possible objection that they can have to passing the resolves.

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. — MORTON — PHELPS.

[July 29th.

But there are other considerations which are entitled to much more weight. There is not only a difference of opinion on the merits of the different systems between the different sections of the Convention, but the members seem to differ widely, very widely, as to the relative favor with which each of the different systems is regarded by the people of the Commonwealth. 'All are, I doubt not, honest and sincere in their convictions; each side seems to be fully persuaded and entirely confident that the people are with them—that the people prefer their system. I have no doubt, as I remarked, that both are equally honest. In my opinion—and it is worth but little—if this question goes to the people, they will prefer the district system for the sake of equality of representation, and of justice and fairness. Other gentlemen are equally confident that the people will prefer town representation. Let the people decide between us. This is all we ask.

There are a portion of the members of this Convention who have very strong objections to town representation; who think it unreasonable, unequal, and unjust. There are individuals in and out of this Convention, whether they are right or wrong in their opinions, who think it so unrighteous they cannot vote for a Constitution containing it. If, therefore, the Constitution is submitted to the people without this proposition—if they are compelled to vote upon only one system of representation—I submit there is great danger that they will vote against the whole, and that all our labor will be lost. There is great danger that the people will prefer the old system to the new, so that gentlemen will not only lose their new system of town representation, but they will also fail in the accomplishment of many other objects which they have in view, and which the people desire. But, on the contrary, if you submit these alternative propositions to the people, you will gain very many votes for the whole work. The friends of each system would suppose that his favorite system would prevail, and therefore would vote for the whole. Many who prefer the district system will vote for the whole, for the purpose of obtaining their object, and many others who prefer the town system, will vote for the whole, for the purpose of obtaining their system of representation. This, therefore, is a very strong argument in favor of submitting this proposition to the people. Deny the right of the people to select for themselves, and you will arouse a spirit which will reject the whole.

There are one or two other facts which I think will recommend this proposition very strongly—and I believe the facts to which I am about to refer are well known to the Convention. I have not made the computation myself, but I am told that it is susceptible of demonstration, that in no one instance has a majority of the people of this Commonwealth, as represented in this Convention, voted in favor of a system of town representation. Those who have examined the subject—and I understand it has been explained in the Convention—have ascertained to a certainty that whenever this matter of town representation has been presented in this Convention and voted upon, in no one instance have one-half, or anything near one-half of the people of the Commonwealth, by their representatives upon this floor, voted for it. If you will compute the number of the constituents, upon the strongest vote given here in favor of town representation, the constituents of the gentlemen who voted for that system will be found to be less, by more than fifty thousand, than one-half the people of the Commonwealth, so that those who did not, by their representatives, vote for it, exceeded those who did, by more than one hundred thousand people.

Now, if you will carry that computation a little farther, and see how many voted, through their representatives, in favor of a district system, you will find in some respects a similar result, though in other respects you will find a wide difference. Although on no occasion has one-half of the people of the Commonwealth, through their representatives, voted for the district system, yet, if you look at the number of the constituents of the respective parties, you will find that those who voted for the district system represented more than thirty-five thousand people more than those who voted against it.

Now, under these circumstances, ought it not—is it not entirely reasonable—is it not entirely just, that this thing should be submitted to the people to say whether they will decide in favor of those who advocate the town system, or those who advocate the district system? Will the minority, because they have by unequal representation the control of this Convention, exercise the power which accident has given them, not only to dictate to the majority here, but to unjustly and unfairly deprive the people of the power to act on the system of the majority, and compel them to take the system of the minority or nothing? I will not believe until I see it done.

These are some of the reasons, without going into the general merits of the question, why I think we should submit this question to the people. There are some other reasons, however, which might be presented. We have had a protracted session; we have had discussions upon a great variety of subjects upon which there has been a great variety of opinion, and the opinions entertained by gentlemen upon the different sides of the questions that have been before us, have been adhered to pertinaciously; but it has given me great pleasure to notice the amenity of deportment and debate that has been observed, the suavity of manner and courtesy which has prevailed between the members of the Convention. I think we may be proud of the dignity and decorum of our discussions, and the conciliatory disposition of which members who advocated—pertinaciously, perhaps—their different opinions, have uniformly manifested towards each other. I am happy to be able to say, that during the whole of our proceedings there has been that decorum, that gentlemanly deportment, that parliamentary regard for rules and orders, which is a prominent characteristic of a patriotic, intelligent, and high-minded body. I am told, Mr. President—I am glad I did not witness it—that upon one occasion the debate became a little squally.

I believe that no voyage, however successful and prosperous, and however happy the passengers and seamen may have been, was ever brought to a close without some clouds. Indeed, a little rough weather is quite necessary to break the monotony, and to give interest to the voyage. I am told that upon a recent occasion, the very last evening, there appeared some threatening clouds which interrupted the composure, and disturbed, to some little extent, the pleasant intercourse which had heretofore prevailed. But I am delighted to know that, like all other squalls, it cleared off, and was succeeded by sunshine and fair weather, the more pleasant for having been interrupted. I hope we shall be able to carry this out till the close of our labors, and that we shall have nothing but the kindest feelings towards each other.

Now, in relation to the resolves before the Convention, let us meet the subject fairly and favorably. Let us submit the question to the people. No one can lose anything by it, unless it be an unjust advantage. We have important reforms which we all wish the people to adopt, some upon which we are pretty generally agreed, and others upon which there is much difference of opinion. But, Sir, let us conciliate upon this great question; let us submit this to the people, and then, I trust, the others will meet a favorable reception. So far as our labors have terminated for good, the people will ratify them, and if in any respect they have been injudicious, the community will sift out the chaff and save the wheat. At any rate, I hope we shall impress upon the minds of the community that we desire to recommend to their favorable consideration, the labors of the Convention.

I will say, in conclusion, that I have very strong fears that unless upon this all-important subject, in which we all feel so deep an interest, which we all consider so vital to the welfare and increasing prosperity of the Commonwealth, I say, that unless we concur in some proposition by which the subject may be thrown open for the consideration and decision of the people, I fear our whole labors may be lost. Let us give them, what I am sure we all desire, a system of representation that shall be in exact conformity with the wishes of the community. [Here the hammer fell.] I have watched the clock, and was just going to add that I was very glad to conclude what I had to say without the interposition of the President's hammer.

Mr. PHELPS, of Monroe. Mr. President: I feel a degree of reluctance to occupy the time of the Convention under the circumstances in which we find ourselves this morning. After the able and eloquent speeches which we have had, and the instruction we have received, it seems almost a work of supererogation for me to attempt to enlighten this Convention; and especially do I feel as though I could expect to receive but little attention, when the pay roll is about to be made up, and there seems to be considerable interest in that matter. But if I could gain the attention of the Convention for a few moments, I should be very glad to do it, inasmuch as I represent one of the small towns, which has a deep interest in the result of this question relating to the basis of the House of Representatives—as great, perhaps, as any town can have. Nevertheless, I made up my mind, when this discussion commenced, that I would not say a word upon the subject. And

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. — PHELPS.

[July 29th.]

I would have adhered to that determination, had it not been for certain ideas advanced by gentlemen on both sides of the question, and especially the idea advanced by the gentleman who represents Wilbraham, when this question was up before. I am sorry that I do not see that gentleman in his seat at the present time. He advanced an idea which has gone to the country, and gone upon the record, giving an impression upon the members from the small towns which is rather unpleasant. That gentleman said that if the members from the small towns did not come to the rescue and help hold up the hands of Moses, he should have to vote for the district system. That statement has gone upon the record, and to the country, and it implies that the small towns have some Moses here to take care of their interests, or else their interests will not be taken care of. I do not believe that gentleman meant what he said; but it is upon record, and it will have the same effect, as it goes out to the country. That gentleman, I suppose, argued the question of town representation as a principle; and I never knew that gentleman forsake what he considered a principle, in regard to any matter whatever.

Sir, it seemed rather hard, after that gentleman had become as it were a sort of acknowledged leader for the small towns, and after he had acknowledged our right in the disputed conflict, and led us on to victory, and the enemy began to scatter in all directions, just because we made one false step, to have the general face about and say: "Soldiers, if you do that again, I will throw up my commission, and go over to the enemy and enlist as a private soldier."

The members from the small towns have occupied but a small part of the time of this Convention, comparatively; and if any apology is wanted, I would say for myself, and I might for many others, that one reason why the members from the small towns have not said more in this Convention, is because speech-making is not their trade or their occupation. They came here with the intention of voting according to the best of their judgment, and only talking when it was actually necessary; to hear all that was said on all sides, and making up their minds so as to vote understandingly, and in a manner to meet the views of their constituents, and accomplish the great object for which this Convention was called.

Another reason why they have not spent the time in speaking upon many questions, is, that there have been plenty of advocates among all parties—gentleman who knew how to talk, who wanted to talk, and did talk. Having plenty of advocates, we thought it not necessary to spend the time in speech-making upon any question whatever. If this is not apology enough, I would say, for one, that after hearing some fifteen or twenty sixty-four pounders, one after another, fired off in regular succession, which had been loaded to the muzzle and rammed down with the iron ramrod of intellect, by men of great experience—after hearing the booming of those mighty cannon, I could not expect to accomplish much by throwing up fire crackers.

After the chairman of the Committee who made this Report had made his candid, able, and telling argument upon this question, and in favor of town representation, we were satisfied to rest the matter there for the time being. But that gentleman was soon assailed and accused of selfishness; figures were made and results announced, showing, as they said, great injustice and inequality. Then, Sir, came forward the untiring, energetic members from Lowell, and they offered to sacrifice, upon the altar of principle, a part of their own power, to preserve town representation. But here it soon became evident that there must be a yielding on both sides. We of the small towns were asked to meet them on some ground of compromise. Yes, Sir, gentlemen from both sides came and urged the members from the small towns to yield something, and give up some portion of their representation, and enter into what was called a compromise. We did so; and over fifty towns consented to yield one-half, so as to be represented every other year. Well, Sir, what thanks did we get for that? The first thing they did was to twit us of surrendering our principle. Yes, Sir, they tell us we abandoned our principle; and, having no principle to stand upon, they very politely ask us to come over to the district system. After each of us had consented to become half a man, or we had yielded up one-half of our representation, we supposed we might ask something from the other side.

The next thing we hear from them is, that it takes three men in Boston to equal one in the country; and they very gravely ask, is it right that one man in the country should equal three in the city? That question has been repeated here time and again.

I would now ask gentlemen who opposed the calling of this Convention, if they were satisfied with the existing Constitution? That is a question which I wish to put distinctly to gentlemen, whether they were satisfied with the present Constitution? I take it for granted they were satisfied; because, if they were not satisfied, why did they not vote for calling the Convention?

I now come to the question of inequality, and I will answer that question by asking another. Is it right for one man in the city of Boston to be made equal to two hundred and twenty men in the country? I wish gentlemen who opposed calling this Convention, to understand that I consider that they were satisfied with the existing Constitution; and now I ask them if it is right, as that Constitution provided, that one man in Boston should be considered equal to two hundred and twenty in the country? For that is the fact under the present Constitution. My proof is this: Every legal voter in the city of Boston has a right to vote for forty-four representatives, every year casting forty-four votes. Well, Sir, I have the right to cast one vote once in five years for a representative—so that they can vote five times forty-four times while I vote once. Now, I ask if that is right? We have not heard a word of complaint on their part on account of its not being right, though it is beyond all dispute a fact that one man in Boston equals two hundred and twenty in some of the small towns.

After having voted down proposition after proposition on the districting system—and the last time by over one hundred majority—then the gentleman from Taunton proposes to put in his old rejected claim, a claim which we had time and again declared we would not indorse. With all due respect to the gentleman who introduced it, I consider it a great absurdity.

Does the gentleman wish to carry out the principle? Then why does he select this particular and take no other? Why take up a proposition which has been voted down by so large a majority, and say nothing about other matters which were passed with a very close vote? Why not send out the whole judiciary question in all its bearings, and let the people say whether they will have the judges elected or appointed—whether they will have the tenure of their office five, seven, ten, or fifteen years, or for life? How do we know how the people would like to have it? Is he afraid to trust the people? If not, then let them have their choice. Then send an alternate proposition concerning the Council, and let the people say whether they will have them elected or appointed. There is a great difference of opinion as to which is the true principle, the majority or plurality. Why do the friends of plurality, who have talked so long and loud upon the subject, ask leave to send both propositions to the people, so that the people can have what they want? Why not say to the people, and done with it, that their delegates cannot agree, unanimously, upon anything; and therefore they, the dear people, may look over our discussions and vote upon all the propositions, and those that receive a majority of votes shall become part of the Constitution. Sir, the people sent us here for no such purpose as this. We were sent here to say what alterations were wanted, to discuss the matter, then vote upon it, and whatever the majority voted for, send to the people; and if it suited them they would accept it; if not, they would reject it. Sir, they did not send us here to get up a proposition for districting the State, and send it back to them, saying that we rejected it in Convention by a very large vote, and we thought it a miserable concern; nevertheless, we did not know but the people might take a fancy to it. So we concluded that if you wanted it, you might have it. Mr. President, I for one, cannot think the people will thank us for pelting them with rotten eggs.

Not a word was said about a district system, before the calling of this Convention. No, Sir; but the argument was: see to it, you of the small towns, go for the Convention, that you may not be annihilated; now is your last chance to preserve town representation. That was the argument. Now, where are those gentlemen who threw the documents all over the country, calling upon us to take our last chance and be saved? Sir, I trust that they are here, and ready to tell by their votes what they have told with their mouths. I trust, Sir, that this project of the gentleman from Taunton will be rejected, with as much unanimity as the others have been. It is high time that we said less and did more. We have already remained here longer than it was expected we should. The people are getting impatient, and no one can blame them. If we had discussed nothing but what was reasonably expected we could carry, and had confined ourselves to the question before us, we might have been at home long ago.

But, Sir, not only the fugitive slave law, but a variety of other subjects have been discussed, that had no relation to our duties here. Sir, members from the small towns will remember with gratitude, not only the able and persevering member for Erving, (Mr. Griswold,) but also the untiring exertions of the very able delegate from the city of Lowell, (Mr. Butler,) and the mild, pleasant, and able arguments of the learned member from Worcester, (Mr. Earle,) the musical and earnest arguments of the gentleman from New Bedford, (Mr. French,) and many others whom it is not necessary to indicate by name.

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, &c. — WHITNEY — DAVIS — CHAPIN — WILSON — TRAIN.

[July 29th.

Mr. WHITNEY, of Boylston. I wish to say a word or two on the proposition which is now submitted. It seems to me to be a very extraordinary proposition. It amounts to this simply: that inasmuch as the large towns and cities have got precisely what they want, they turn round and ask us in the small towns to accept what we do not want. Why cannot gentlemen be satisfied with having their own way in the cities and large towns? If you are districted as you wish to be in the cities and large towns, why do you wish to have the small towns put the rope around their own necks and be drawn up to what they do not want? It seems to me to be a very strange proposition that we of the small towns are to come here and give the large towns what they want, and then put the rope upon our necks and put the other end in their own hands, and let them hang us up to kick. That is the whole of the proposition. I think the cities and towns should be satisfied if they have got all they want. Cannot they permit that Mordecai shall sit at the king's gate if they can have all they desire, until they strangle him upon their gallows? I think we will not consent to it. But if the Convention, contrary to what has been expected all along, should permit this double proposition to go forth to the people, I wish to amend it. I have a proposition or two which I wish to have go to the people. Now, with all due deference to the learning and judgment of the delegate from Taunton, I must be permitted to say that I think the enfranchisement of one-half the people of the Commonwealth, right straight out, is of more consequence than a little inequality which may exist now. And I think the disfranchisement of five hundred, either in the city or country, is of more importance than these side issues where there is a little inequality.

I wish to say one word on the subject of official oaths, whether they shall be abolished. I wish that question to go out among the questions which are to go to the people. And, in the second place, I wish the word "male" to be stricken from the qualification for voting, in the Constitution. I have an inkling that the people are a little ahead of the Constitution in that respect. They are satisfied that no good comes from swearing, and that no evil would come from striking out the word "male." I wish it to go to the people. I will not say that I shall be satisfied with their decision, because I will not be satisfied with anything that is wrong, whether it is done by a million or by one man. I may submit to it. I am not satisfied with the decision that eighteen millions may trample on the rights of three millions. I say it is wicked and cowardly, and we have no right to do it, either as Democrats, as Christians, or as men.

I wish to say one word as to the limitation of the exercise of power by majorities. There is a limitation of majorities. They may not do everything. You may refuse my proposition here, but suppose this Convention say I shall be hung on the Common, have they a right to do it, or have all the men in Massachusetts a right to do it, or have all the men in the Union a right to do it? I say no, and I do not submit to it. Suppose you act on the question of my liberty. Without my being convicted of any crime, have you a right to take away my liberty? I say no. If every man in Massachusetts is engaged in doing it, would that make it right? I say no; and if the whole Union engage in it, I still say no. I feel that I have a right to liberty and life, and there is no principle in democracy or religion, which will authorize you to deprive me of them. If there is a single human being in this great family of nine hundred millions, who is to be deprived of liberty without being convicted of crime, I see no reason why I should not be the man. Therefore, I do not consent to any man's being subjected, without being convicted of crime, either to the penalty of death, or to the penalty of slavery. There is a great disposition in this Convention, it seems to me, to puff up and adore this Union, and to express a great reverence for it. Permit me to say, Mr. President, that I have some misgivings upon this topic. I cannot consent to glorify this Union while it refuses to give freedom to its people. I say it is cowardly for nineteen millions of Anglo Saxons to tread upon three millions of negroes and mixed races. It is un-democratic and un-Christian, and against the Bible; and, although some of our doctors of divinity have caved in, and have carried some of our old friends away with them, by proclaiming that the Bible sanctions slavery, yet, Sir, I choose, so far as I am concerned, to interpret the Bible for myself, and not to have doctors of divinity interpret it for me.

Now some things have been said, in this Convention, with reference to these two propositions which I bring forward here, and considerable liberty has been taken, as I understand; for, although I was not here, I have been informed that some of my friends have been assailed in a manner which was not altogether becoming to the dignity of such a Convention as this. A great many harsh things have been said here, against the rights of women, and against come-outers. Sir, I have a great reverence for come-outers. Abraham came out from his father's house, and from the religion of his fathers. The Puritans were also come-outers, and came over the seas to enjoy their religious sentiments unmolested. I believe, Sir, that if the truth was known, we are all come-outers, more or less, but some of our friends are older, and have gone to seed a little. They came over so long ago that they have forgotten it, and have gone to seed; and perhaps we shall go to seed too, if we live long enough. It seems to me, that if gentlemen have nothing better to say against this proposition, than to apply the term "Mr." to one of the most womanly women in this Commonwealth, one who is educated and refined, and who has graduated at one of your colleges; and to apply the term "Miss" to such a man as Wendell Phillips, they must be in a desperate situation for want of arguments; and we are driven to institute a comparison between the blackguardism and wit of the fish market and the grog saloons, and that which is introduced here by a distinguished doctor of divinity—we are driven to institute a comparison to see which is the most dignified, and which is to be regarded as the most worthy of men who take part in the proceedings of this body.

Mr. DAVIS, of Fall River. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know what the question is, and if the gentleman from Boylston is speaking to the question?

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Boylston will be good enough to state his amendment.

Mr. WHITNEY. I propose to amend the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, by adding to it the following questions: "Shall official oaths and affirmations be abolished?" and "Shall the term male be stricken from the Constitution?"

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Boylston will perceive that both of these propositions relate to a subject different from that which is under consideration, and are therefore excluded by the rule. He can introduce them in a separate resolve, but they are not in order at this time.

Mr. CHAPIN, of Webster, moved the previous question.

Mr. WILSON, of Natick. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion, and that we shall proceed to act upon the special assignment. That can be taken up and disposed of in a few minutes.

Mr. CHAPIN. I had concluded from the two last speeches that have been made, that it was about time to take the question. I have no objection to withdrawing the motion, if the gentleman from Natick desires it.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to lay this subject on the table, with a view of taking up the special assignment, being the resolves upon the subject of plurality.

The motion to lay upon the table was agreed to.

The Plurality Question.

On motion by Mr. WILSON, the Convention proceeded to consider the first and fourth resolves on the subject of plurality, which were read, as follows:—

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide in the Constitution that a majority of all the votes given shall be necessary to the election of a Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary, Treasurer, Auditor, and Attorney-General of the Commonwealth, until otherwise provided by law; but no such law, providing that the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary, Treasurer, Auditor, Attorney-General, and Representatives to the General Court, or either of them, shall be elected by plurality, instead of a majority of votes given in, shall take effect until one year after its passage; and if at any time after the enactment of any such law, and the same shall have taken effect, such law shall be repealed, such repeal shall not become a law until one year after the passage of the repealing act; and, in default of any such law, if at any election of either of the above named officers, except the Representatives to the General Court, no person shall have a majority of the votes given, the House of Representatives shall, by a majority of viva voce votes, elect two out of three persons who had the highest, if so many shall have been voted for, and return the persons so elected to the Senate, from which the Senate shall, by viva voce vote, elect one who shall be Governor, or other officer to be thus elected.

4. Resolved, That in the election of all city or town officers, such rule of election shall govern as the legislature may by law prescribe.

The question being on the final passage of the resolves,

Mr. TRAIN moved to amend the first resolve, so that it shall read as follows:—

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide in the Constitution that a plurality of the votes given shall be necessary to the election of a Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary, Treasurer, Auditor, and Attorney-General of the Commonwealth, until otherwise provided by law; but no such

Friday,]

ELECTIONS BY PLURALITY. — BIRD.

[July 29th.

law, providing that the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary, Treasurer, Auditor, Attorney-General, and Representatives to the General Court, or either of them, shall be elected by a majority of votes given in, shall take effect until one year after its passage; and if at any time after the enactment of any such law, and the same shall have taken effect, such law shall be repealed, such repeal shall not become a law until one year after the passage of the repealing act; and in default of any such law, if at any election of either of the above named officers, except the Representatives to the General Court, no person shall have a plurality of the votes given, the House of Representatives shall, by a plurality of viva voce votes, elect two out of three persons who had the highest, if so many shall have been voted for, and return the persons so elected to the Senate, from which the Senate shall, by viva voce vote, elect one who shall be Governor, or other officer to be thus elected.

Mr. BIRD, of Walpole. I believe that precisely the same amendment was moved yesterday in the Convention, and it was rejected. The proposition was made, I think, by the gentleman from Boston, Mr. Schouler.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has inquired of the Secretary, and finds no record of such a motion. The Chair supposes that this precise question has not been presented.

The question being then taken on the motion of Mr. Train, on a division, there were—ayes, 120; noes, 194—so it was not agreed to.

The question then recurring on the final passage of the resolves, Mr. BUTLER asked for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas, 184; nays, 169—as follows:—

YEAS.

Abbott, Josiah G.	Cushman, Henry W.
Adams, Shubael P.	Cushman, Thomas
Allen, James B.	Cutler, Simeon N.
Allis, Josiah	Dana, Richard H., Jr.
Alvord, D. W.	Davis, Charles G.
Austin, George	Davis, Isaac
Baker, Hillel	Davis, Robert T.
Barrett, Marcus	Day, Gilman
Bates, Eliakim A.	Deming, Elijah S.
Bates, Moses, Jr.	Denton, Augustus
Beal, John	Duncan, Samuel
Bennett, Zephaniah	Dunham, Bradish
Bigelow, Edward B.	Durgin, John M.
Bird, Francis W.	Eames, Philip
Bliss, Gad O.	Earle, John M.
Booth, William S.	Easland, Peter
Boutwell, Geo. S.	Edwards, Elisha
Boutwell, Sewell	Fay, Sullivan
Bradford, William J. A.	Fellows, James K.
Breed, Hiram N.	Fisk, Lyman
Bronson, Asa	Fiske, Emory
Brown, Adolphus F.	Foster, Aaron
Brown, Artemas	Foster, Abram
Brown, Hammond	Fowle, Samuel
Brownell, Frederick	Freeman, James M.
Brownell, Joseph	French, Charles A.
Bryant, Patrick	French, Rodney
Burlingame, Anson	French, Samuel
Butler, Benjamin F.	Gale, Luther
Cady, Henry	Giles, Charles G.
Caruthers, William	Gooch, Daniel W.
Case, Isaac	Gooding, Leonard
Chapin, Daniel E.	Green, Jabez
Chapin, Henry	Griswold, Josiah W.
Childs, Josiah	Griswold, Whiting
Churchill, J. McKean	Hadley, Samuel P.
Clark, Henry	Hagood, Lyman W.
Clark, Salah	Hagood, Seth
Clarke, Stillman	Haskins, William
Cleverly, William	Hawkes, Stephen E.
Crane, George B.	Hayden, Isaac
Cressy, Oliver S.	Heath, Ezra, 2d
Cross, Joseph W.	Hewes, James

Hewes, William H.	Perkins, Noah C.
Hobart, Henry	Phelps, Charles
Holder, Nathaniel	Phinney, Silvanus B.
Hood, George	Pool, James M.
Hooper, Foster	Putnam, John A.
Howard, Martin	Rantoul, Robert
Hunt, Charles E.	Richards, Luther
Huntington, Charles P.	Richardson, Daniel
Huntington, George H.	Richardson, Nathan
Hurlbut, Moses C.	Richardson, Samuel H.
Hyde, Benjamin D.	Ring, Elkannah, Jr.
Jacobs, John	Rockwood, Joseph M.
Johnson, John	Rogers, John
Kendall, Isaac	Ross, David S.
Kimball, Joseph	Sanderson, Amasa
Knight, Hiram	Sanderson, Chester
Knight, Jefferson	Simmons, Perez
Knowlton, Charles L.	Simonds, John W.
Knowlton, William H.	Sprague, Melzar
Knox, Albert	Spooner, Samuel W.
Langdon, Wilber C.	Stevens, Joseph L., Jr.
Lawrence, Luther	Stevens, William
Lawton, Job G., Jr.	Stiles, Gideon
Leland, Alden	Strong, Alfred L.
Lincoln, Abishai	Thayer, Joseph
Little, Otis	Thayer, Willard, 2d
Littlefield, Tristram	Tilton, Abraham
Loomis, E. Justin	Turner, David P.
Marble, William P.	Tyler, William
Marcy, Laban	Underwood, Orison
Marvin, Abijah P.	Vinton, George A.
Merritt, Simeon	Walker, Amasa
Moore, James M.	Ward, Andrew H.
Morton, Marcus, Jr.	Warner, Samuel, Jr.
Morton, William S.	Waters, Asa H.
Nash, Hiram	Weston, Gershom B.
Nayson, Jonathan	White, George
Nichols, William	Whitney, Daniel S.
Nute, Andrew T.	Whitney, James S.
Ober, Joseph E.	Wilbur, Daniel
Orne, Benjamin S.	Wilbur, Joseph
Osgood, Charles	Williams, J. B.
Packer, E. Wing	Wilson, Henry
Paine, Benjamin	Winn, Jonathan B.
Paine, Henry	Winslow, Levi M.
Parris, Jonathan	Wood, Charles C.
Partridge, John	Wood, Nathaniel
Peabody, Nathaniel	Wood, Otis
Penniman, John	Wright, Ezekiel

NAYS.

Adams, Benjamin P.	Copeland, Benjamin F.
Aldrich, P. Emory	Crittenden, Simeon
Allen, Charles	Crockett, George W.
Allen, Joel C.	Crosby, Leander
Allen, Parsons	Davis, Ebenezer
Andrews, Robert	Davis, John
Aspinwall, William	Davis, Solomon
Atwood, David C.	Dawes, Henry L.
Ayres, Samuel	Dean, Silas
Ball, George S.	Dehon, William
Bancroft, Alpheus	Denison, Hiram S.
Barrows, Joseph	Doane, James C.
Bartlett, Russel	Dorman, Moses
Bartlett, Sidney	Eaton, Liley
Beebe, James M.	Ely, Homer
Bell, Luther V.	Farwell, A. G.
Bennett, William, Jr.	Fowler, Samuel P.
Bigelow, Jacob	French, Charles H.
Bradbury, Ebenezer	Frothingham, Rich'd, Jr.
Brewster, Osmyn	Gardner, Henry J.
Brinley, Francis	Gardner, Johnson
Briggs, George N.	Gates, Elbridge
Buck, Asahel	Gilbert, Wanton C.
Bullock, Rufus	Gilbert, Washington
Bumpus, Cephas C.	Giles, Joel
Chandler, Amariah	Gould, Robert
Chapin, Chester W.	Goulding, Dalton
Clark, Ransom	Goulding, Jason
Clarke, Alpheus B.	Gray, John C.
Coggin, Jacob	Hale, Artemas
Cole, Lansing J.	Hale, Nathan
Cole, Sumner	Hallett, B. F.
Conkey, Ithamar	Hammond, A. B.
Cook, Charles E.	Harmon, Phineas
Coolidge, Henry F.	Hathaway, Elnathan P.

Hayward, George	Plunkett, William C.
Hazewell, Charles C.	Pomroy, Jeremiah
Heard, Charles	Rawson, Silas
Henry, Samuel	Read, James
Hersey, Henry	Reed, James
Heywood, Levi	Rice, David
Hinsdale, William	Rockwell, Julius
Hobart, Aaron	Royce, James C.
Hopkinson, Thomas	Sargent, John
Houghton, Samuel	Schouler, William
Howland, Abraham H.	Sherrill, John
Hoyt, Henry K.	Sikes, Chester
Hunt, William	Sleeper, John S.
Huntington, Asahel	Smith, Matthew
Hurlbut, Samuel A.	Southon, John
James, William	Stetson, Caleb
Jenkins, John	Stevens, Charles G.
Kellogg, Giles C.	Stevens, Granville
Kinsman, Henry W.	Sumner, Increase
Knight, Joseph	Taft, Arnold
Knowlton, J. S. C.	Thomas, John W.
Kuhn, George, H.	Thompson, Charles
Ladd, Gardner P.	Tilston, Edmund P.
Lincoln, Frederic W., Jr.	Tilton, Horatio W.
Livermore, Isaac	Train, Charles R.
Lord, Otis P.	Turner, David
Lothrop, Samuel K.	Upham, Charles W.
Loud, Samuel P.	Upton, George B.
Lowell, John A.	Viles, Joel
Miller, Theophilus R.	Walcott, Samuel B.
Miller, Seth, Jr.	Wales, Bradford L.
Mixter, Samuel	Wallace, Frederick T.
Monroe, James L.	Wallis, Freeland
Morey, George	Walker, Samuel
Morris, Joseph B.	Weeks, Cyrus
Morton, Marcus	Wetmore, Thomas
Noyes, Daniel	Wheeler, William F.
Oliver, Henry K.	White, Benjamin
Orcutt, Nathan	Wildor, Joel
Park, John G.	Wilkinson, Ezra
Parker, Adolphus G.	Williams, Henry
Pease, Jeremiah, Jr.	Wilson, Milo
Perkins, Daniel A.	Wilson, Willard
Perkins, Jesse	Woods, Josiah B.
Pierce, Henry

ABSENT.

Abbott, Alfred A.	Kellogg, Martin R.
Alley, John B.	Keyes, Edward L.
Appleton, William	Kingman, Joseph
Ballard, Alvah	Ladd, John S.
Banks, Nathaniel P., Jr.	Mason, Charles
Beach, Erasmus D.	Meader, Reuben
Bishop, Henry W.	Morton, Elbridge G.
Blagden, George W.	Newman, Charles
Bliss, William C.	Norton, Alfred
Braman, Milton P.	Paige, James W.
Brown, Alpheus R.	Parker, Joel
Brown, Hiram C.	Parker, Samuel D.
Bullen, Amos H.	Parsons, Samuel C.
Carter, Timothy W.	Parsons, Thomas A.
Choate, Rufus	Payson, Thomas E.
Cogswell, Nathaniel	Peabody, George
Crowell, Seth	Perkins, Jonathan C.
Crowninshield, F. B.	Powers, Peter
Cummings, Joseph	Preston, Jonathan
Curtis, Wilber	Prince, F. O.
DeWitt, Alexander	Putnam, George
Edwards, James, 2d	Sampson, George R.
Eaton, Calvin D.	Sheldon, Luther
Edwards, Samuel	Sherman, Charles
Ely, Joseph M.	Stacy, Eben H.
Eustis, William T.	Stevenson, J. Thomas
Fitch, Ezekiel W.	Storow, Charles S.
Graves, John W.	Stutson, William
Greene, William B.	Sumner, Charles
Greenleaf, Simon	Swain, Alanson
Hall, Charles B.	Taber, Isaac C.
Haskell, George	Talbot, Thomas
Hillard, George S.	Taylor, Ralph
Hobbs, Edwin	Tower, Ephraim
Hubbard, William J.	Tyler, John S.
Ide, Abijah M., Jr.	Warner, Marshal
Jackson, Samuel	Wilkins, John H.
Jenks, Samuel H.	Wood, William H.

Absent and not voting, 76.

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, &c. — WILSON.

[July 29th.

So the resolves were passed.

The whole series is as follows :—

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide in the Constitution that a majority of all the votes given shall be necessary to the election of a Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary, Treasurer, Auditor, and Attorney-General of the Commonwealth, until otherwise provided by law; but no such law providing that the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary, Treasurer, Auditor, Attorney-General, and Representatives to the General Court, or either of them, shall be elected by plurality, instead of a majority of votes given, shall take effect until one year after its passage; and if at any time after the enactment of any such law, and the same shall have taken effect, such law shall be repealed, such repeal shall not become a law until one year after the passage of the repealing act; and in default of any such law, if at any election of either of the above named officers, except the Representatives to the General Court, no person shall have a majority of the votes given, the House of Representatives shall, by a majority of viva voce votes, elect two out of three persons who had the highest, if so many shall have been voted for, and return the persons so elected to the Senate, from whom the Senate shall, by viva voce vote, elect one who shall be Governor, or other officer thus to be elected.

2. Resolved, That in all the elections of Senators and Councillors, the person having the highest number of votes shall be elected.

3. Resolved, That it is expedient so to amend the Constitution as to provide that a majority of votes shall be necessary for the election of Representatives to the General Court, until otherwise provided by law.

4. Resolved, That in the election of all city or town officers, such rule of election shall govern as the legislature may by law prescribe.

5. Resolved, That in the election of all county and district officers, the person having the highest number of votes shall be elected.

6. Resolved, That in all elections where the person having the highest number of votes may be elected, and there is a failure of election because two persons have an equal number of votes, subsequent trials may be had at such times as may be prescribed by the legislature.

Representation.

On motion by Mr. MORTON, of Taunton, the Convention resumed the consideration of the resolves submitted by him, respecting the mode of submitting the question of representation to the people.

Mr. WILSON, of Natick. Mr. President: It seems to me that the proposition of the distinguished gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) to submit to the people an alternate plan for the basis of the House of Representatives, will have a tendency to distract, divide, and embarrass the friends of the amended Constitution. I may be mistaken, my apprehensions may be groundless. I admit that the plan may be clearly comprehended, fully understood by the people, so that the friends of reform, upon whom we are to rely to carry through the amendments which the Convention has adopted, may not be at cross purposes during the canvass; but it does appear to me, that it will, if adopted, lead to a diversity of sentiments, opinions, and actions among the friends of constitutional reform. Looking at the proposition—as I cannot but look at it in this light—I cannot give my humble support to it. On the contrary, I feel it to be my duty to do all I can do honorably to prevent its adoption by this Convention.

After days—weeks of debate—after listening to a discussion distinguished for its profound ability, the Convention has expressed its deliberate judgment upon the question. The Convention, by a majority of about one hundred, has decided in favor of a mixed system, based upon corporate rights and population. That system, as it now stands in the amended Constitution, is the deliberate judgment of the Convention. It will go out to the people of Massachusetts as the sense of the Convention. Unequal as it is—unequal as any system that preserves town representation must be—it is the product of the deliberations of the Convention, and it will go out to the people with the sanction of men presumed to embody and express the popular will. Yes, Sir, unequal as it is, it will be sustained by the ideas, habits, associations, and prejudices of the people. For more than six generations the people of this old Commonwealth have maintained the system of town representation, under some modifications. Gentlemen who expect the people to relinquish a system endeared to them by the associations of two centuries, undervalue the force of old habits, associations and ideas. There are, it cannot be denied, members of the Convention, representing large constituencies, who do not prefer the plan adopted, who have not supported that plan, and who are in favor of a district system, based upon population or legal voters.

It is well known, Sir, that there are very many members of the Convention who are in favor of a district system, but who hesitate to vote for it, believing that the people are not yet prepared to abandon town representation, and to adopt a district system. These members have voted for town representation, thus swelling the majority for the plan adopted.

There are several members who doubt whether the Convention has decided in accordance with the wishes of the people or not. These members are divided in their action. Some of them have given reluctant votes for the plan adopted; others of them have voted for a district system throughout. These members are united in the wish to take the sense of the people, if it is practicable to do so, without endangering the whole of the constitutional amendments.

Now, Sir, I am willing to incorporate into the Constitution a provision that shall give the people an opportunity to pass upon the question hereafter, whether they will have the State divided into districts for the choice of representatives or not. The friends of town representation—of the system which is now determined upon—have carried here, that system, by an immense majority. If this Convention reflects the popular will—and gentlemen think it does—I am sure the friends of that system cannot object to giving the people an opportunity to vote upon the district system when that system is perfected and presented to them in detail.

I cannot give my vote for the proposition now pending, introduced by the member from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) because in my judgment it will tend to complicate affairs, to embarrass and distract the people, and possibly to defeat the chief object of the Convention. I am willing to go for a plan like the one I hold in my hand. I will read the proposition for the information of the Convention—which I shall move when the proper time for doing so shall have arrived—as an amendment to the proposition offered by the delegate from Taunton. It is as follows:—

Resolved, That it is expedient so to amend the Constitution as to provide, that the legislature which shall be chosen at the general election in November, 1855, shall be required to divide the State into forty single districts for the choice of Senators, such districts to be of contiguous territory, and as equal in the number of qualified voters contained in each district as may be; and also to divide the State into single or double districts for the choice of not less than two hundred and forty nor more than three hundred and twenty representatives, such districts to be of contiguous territory, and as equal in the number of qualified voters contained in each district as may be, with proper provisions for redistricting the State as aforesaid, in the year 1866, and every tenth year thereafter, and with all other provisions necessary for carrying such system of districts into operation; and to submit the same to the people at a general election to be held in the year 1856 for their ratification; and, if the same shall be ratified by the people, it shall become part of this Constitution, in place of the provision herein contained for the apportioning of Senators and Representatives.

Now, Sir, this is not an alternative proposition. It is simply a provision for the future amendment of the Constitution. It is plain, clear, simple—easily comprehended by all. It provides that the legislature, which will be the second legislature chosen under this amended Constitution, in the year 1855, shall, in the session of 1856, district the State into forty single senatorial districts, and into single or double representative districts, making a House of Representatives of not less than two hundred and forty, nor more than three hundred and twenty; and to submit the question to the people, at the November election of 1856. The people will then have tested the system agreed upon by this Convention. It will have been in full operation; they will have had it for two years; its benefits, if benefits it have, they will have enjoyed; and its evils, if evils it have, they will have suffered; and they will be able to say whether they are in favor of the continuation of that system or not. They will, at the same time, have presented to them a district system, based upon legal voters for the Senate and House of Representatives, carried into full detail, so that every one will know into what senatorial or representative district he goes. Then the whole question will be fairly presented to the people; and the issue will be between the system then existing and the district system presented to them in detail, full and complete, with provisions for re-districting the State in 1866, and every tenth year thereafter.

Now, Mr. President, this proposition is simple, plain, and clear—easily comprehended by all men. There is nothing in it calculated to complicate the question at issue, or to embarrass the friends of constitutional reform, in or out of the Convention. The Convention, by a decisive majority, has adopted the system of town representation, modified by population. That system, if sanctioned by the people, will go into operation in 1854. The legislature chosen under that system will, in 1856, district the Commonwealth for senators and representatives, based on legal voters. The friends of town representation can vote for the Constitution with this provision in it. By so doing, they secure the adoption of this system—they secure its benefits to the people. The friends of the district system can vote for the Constitution with this provision in it. By so doing, they secure, three years hence, the privilege, the right, to vote for a district system, which they desire, and which they believe the people of Massachusetts also desire.

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. — WILSON.

[July 29th.

Yes, Sir, the friends of both systems, if they have confidence in their systems, and confidence in the people, can vote for the Constitution with both systems embodied in it. If the people want town representation, they will take and keep it. If they want the district system, they will, in 1856, accept it. Adopt the amendment I propose—adopt the Constitution, as amended, next autumn, and then trust the two systems of representation to the people, and abide the popular verdict. This is all any one can desire, who is willing to trust the people to settle the question for themselves.

I may be told, Mr. President, that the adoption of the amendment I propose, expresses distrust of the system agreed upon. I do not think so. It is a fair and liberal proposition. The Convention has expressed its views in language not equivocal. The majority simply say to the minority: "We are for town representation, you are for a district system. We are confident that the people are for town representation; you say they are for the district system. We have secured town representation, but we have confidence in our system and in the people; we will be fair and liberal. We will vote to submit, three years hence, a detailed district system to the people, and we will cheerfully abide the result."

Sir, there is no distrust, no weakness in this. There is confidence in the plan adopted, confidence in the judgment of the people, and a spirit of liberality and magnanimity in it. The friends of constitutional reform cannot but appreciate the spirit of liberality which this act of the friends of town representation manifests. I appeal to the advocates of town representation to support the amendment I have proposed; and I call upon the friends of the district system to respond to the action of their associates, and to unite in placing this provision into the Constitution. By so doing, they will secure the adoption of the Constitution by the people, and thus incorporate into the fundamental law, the reforms which have received the sanction of the Convention.

But I may be told, Mr. President, that nothing will be gained by the adoption of the plan I propose. Gentlemen who entertain this idea are mistaken, altogether mistaken. We have provided for future amendments of the Constitution, in the following ways: A majority of the Senate, and two-thirds of the House of Representatives, of two successive legislatures, may propose specific amendments to the Constitution, for the ratification of the people. The legislature may submit, at any session, to the people, the question of calling a Convention. The people, in 1873, and every twentieth year thereafter, shall vote upon the question of calling a Convention; the legislature shall submit the question to the people, if one-third of the legal voters voting at the annual election shall require it. These are the modes provided in the amended Constitution for future amendments. No one can reasonably expect that the people will at present vote for another Convention, even should the amended Constitution fail to meet the just expectations of the people. No one can reasonably expect that the legislature, constituted as the House is, will frame a district system, to be submitted to the people. He must be a sanguine man who supposes that two successive legislatures will, by a majority of the Senate and two-thirds of the House of Representatives, frame a district system. The friends of the district system cannot reasonably hope to obtain such a system within a few years, either by a Constitutional Convention or by the action of the legislature, by either of the provisions for future amendments. Now the amendment I propose, makes it the duty of the legislature chosen in 1855, to divide the Commonwealth into senatorial and representative districts, and to submit the plan to the people at the general election in 1856, for their ratification. This duty, the legislature of 1856 must perform, or it must fail to perform its constitutional duties. This, Sir, is what is secured by the proposition I intend to submit. It secures all that the friends of the district system can reasonably demand; more than they have had reason to anticipate at the hands of this Convention, after the adoption of the plan agreed upon by a majority of more than one hundred.

Gentlemen will say that the legislature of 1856 will not district the State fairly—that the district system will not have a fair chance before the people. The amendment I propose, provides that the districts shall be based upon legal voters—as equal in number in each district as may be—and each of the districts to be of contiguous territory. The system must necessarily be fair and equitable. The Senate is based upon population—it represents the popular sentiments in the fullest manner. That body will not consent to an unjust and unequal district system, even if the House of Representatives should be disposed to adopt such an one. I have the fullest confidence that the legislature of 1856 will fairly and faithfully discharge and perform its constitutional obligations—that it will frame a just and equitable district system for the ratification of the people.

But, I may be told, Sir, that a detailed district system, even if fairly made, will not receive the support of the people; that such a system goes to the people under peculiar disadvantages; that men in favor of a district system may not like the districts adopted. To this objection, I reply, that the friends of the district system have no right to ask and no reason to expect, that the simple proposition—"Shall the State be divided into districts for the election of members of the House of Representatives?"—shall ever be submitted to the people. The town representation plan goes to the people in detail—the people know where they are to go. If a district system is to be submitted to the people, it is fair and just that it should go to them in detail, so that they may know into what districts they are to be classed. The people ought not to be required to abandon town representation for an ideal district system. And, I venture to say, that no legislature will consent to submit the district system to the people, unless that system is perfected—so framed as to give the people a fair view of its workings.

If the advocates of the district system are not willing to allow the question to go to the people in a detailed form, they show a want of confidence in the system, and a distrust of the sentiments of the people. I am for the district system, and I am willing to submit the question to the people, completed, and to abide the popular verdict.

It cannot be denied, Mr. President, that there is great hostility to the plan adopted by the Convention. Some of the ablest friends of the Convention—in and out of it—are opposed to it. Some of these gentlemen will acquiesce in the plan agreed upon, and will do all in their power to secure the ratification of the amended Constitution, for the sake of other reforms which have been adopted. A few other gentlemen tell us that they shall not vote for the Constitution—that they shall do all in their power to defeat it before the people. Now, Sir, I have the fullest confidence in the people. I believe that they will ratify the doings of the Convention by a decisive majority. Upon this point I feel the confident assurance of victory. But, I see and feel that we are to carry it by great efforts and labors—efforts and labors we know how to make, and which we shall make.

If the Constitution goes out to the people in its present form, I tell its friends that it is to encounter the fiercest opposition. Powerful interests are combining to defeat its ratification. Money will be poured out like autumnal rains to defeat it. They must be prepared to carry it by main strength before the people. It will demand immense efforts to repel the onslaughts that will be made upon it, and to carry it safely through the storms of denunciation which its opponents will hurl upon it. The presses of the opposition to the Convention have opened their batteries upon the plan adopted. They are preparing to pour upon the friends of that plan, and upon the friends of constitutional reform, an unrelenting fire to be continued from this time to November next.

Sir, I have watched, with some little care and interest, the course of the presses opposed to this Convention, and I am constrained to say, that from the hour of the meeting of the Convention to this day, these presses have done all in their power to misrepresent the acts of the Convention, and the members of the majority of the Convention; they have done all in their power to prepare the minds of the people to reject the doings of the Convention. These presses, the exponents of the party whose organs they are, have seized upon the inequalities of the plan adopted as the basis of the House of Representatives, with the hope that they may defeat the amended Constitution, and bury its friends beneath its ruins.

Sir, the adoption of the proposition I intend to submit as an amendment to the plan proposed by the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) will spike these batteries—silence them, and break the power and force of the opposition now forming to assail the amended Constitution. Sir, I have reflected upon this proposition; I have slept upon it; and I am sure its adoption will crush all opposition, and carry the amended Constitution triumphantly before the people. Leaving to the friends of the district system a fair opportunity to obtain it three years hence—an opportunity which they cannot have unless such a provision be incorporated into the Constitution—it will bring—it must bring to the support of the amended Constitution, friends and supporters from all parties. Yes, Sir; its adoption will unite all the friends of Constitutional Reform, and it will draw thousands from the ranks of that party whose opposition to this Constitutional Convention its best and most sagacious men feel to have been a political blunder.

To the advocates of the district system I appeal to support this amendment, because it secures to you the right and the privilege of taking the sense of the people upon that system three years hence. To the friends of town representation I appeal to support this amendment, because it secures to you the adoption and fair trial for two years of your favorite system of representation. To the friends of the amended Constitution I appeal, to vote for this amendment, because its adoption will draw the fire of the batteries of the opposition—break the force of the opposition to the ratification by the people of the work of the Convention, and carry gloriously through the reforms which we have adopted at so much cost of toil, time and expense.

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—HOOPER—ALVORD.

[July 29th.

Mr. President: I give notice that I shall, at the proper time, submit the plan I have read to the Convention. I have read it, so that gentlemen of the Convention may understand what are its principal provisions.

Mr. HOOPER, of Fall River. I am glad that the gentleman from Natick, (Mr. Wilson,) has come forward with a proposition of this character, and which I hope his friends will support. Although I much prefer the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) and shall do what I can to support it, yet I am willing, if I cannot get that, to accept even this, because it gives me some ground on which I can stand. I believe, that if the Constitution goes out to the people without some provision of this character, it is destined to be defeated. I am confident of it, Sir, for I hear it said, over and over again, every day, by those who have the means of knowing something of the views and feelings of the people, that the friends of this Convention cannot be brought to support this Constitution, without the adoption of a plan of this kind. I apprehend, Sir, that the plan which has been adopted, is more defective than it is generally supposed to be; and, Sir, every provision for its future amendment, only goes to perpetuate these defects, and make the plan even worse for the future than it is for the present. If its operation were to remain precisely as applied to the existing condition of things, it is quite possible that the people might accept it and let it stand. But, Sir, what is to be the future effect of it? Let us suppose that the whole increase of the population of this State, is to be confined to the large towns and cities sending more than one representative. Let us suppose, also, that within the next twenty years we should increase in population to three millions—what would be the result? Simply that the number of inhabitants required to elect more than one representative in a town or city, will be enormously increased, while those towns, no matter how large their population, that are now entitled to send more than one member to the House of Representatives, will still only have the power of sending their present number, unless their individual rate of increase shall exceed that of the whole State. Under the present provision, should such an increase take place in large towns only, it might result that less than one-fifth, or even one-eighth of the people of the Commonwealth might elect the majority of the House of Representatives, and you propose that all future Conventions shall be called and constituted on the same unequal basis. What, then, is the chance of ever peaceably getting an equal system, unless some provision of this kind shall be incorporated into the Constitution?

Sir, I am surprised to see gentlemen undertake to support such a system here; and I was not less surprised to hear the gentleman from Boylston, (Mr. Whitney,) who professes to have a conscience, and who appears to be very conscientious and honest on all other subjects, supporting the unequal system which has been adopted. Let me put this matter in its right point of view. Suppose that the political franchise, as bequeathed to us by our fathers, was a legacy involving a money consideration in the shape of an annuity to each voter, each to share equally. How would you divide it? By giving to one man six or eight times as much as you give to another? I ask if that would be regarded as right or honest, by the gentleman from Boylston, or if any man, under such circumstances, could be found, who would claim a larger portion for himself, than he would concede to every other man, as his just right? I do not believe that any just or honest man would do it.

Now, so far from the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton tending to complicate this matter, I think its tendency is quite the reverse. What is the proposition? In the first place, every man is called upon to say whether the old system shall be abrogated or not. If the majority vote for abrogating the old system, why of course it will be done away with. Then every man who is called upon to say whether he is in favor of sustaining or abrogating the old system, is called upon, at the same time, to vote in favor of one of the two propositions here offered—either the town system we have already adopted, or the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton. And, Sir, I must say that that seems to me to be a very plain proposition, one very easily understood, and one with which I could cheerfully and confidently go before my constituents, with an expectation of success; and, with such a provision, I could advocate the Constitution in every other respect, because I could then take my stand in the affirmative, on a question involving a matter of fundamental equality. I should, therefore, much prefer the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, to the old system, and should consequently vote for the abrogation of that system, as would every other man who should prefer either of these new propositions to it, and the result would necessarily be the abrogation of the old system, and the adoption of one or the other of these new propositions, as the people should prefer. In that way you will let the people vote upon the matter as they please. And why should they not?

But the gentleman from Natick says, that the system we have adopted has been adopted by an overwhelming majority of the Convention, and that the Convention reflects the sentiments of the people of the Commonwealth. Is that so? Has that gentleman examined the yeas and nays as they have been taken on this question, and ascertained how many of the people are represented by that majority? Sir, you will find that the majority of the people of the Commonwealth, who are represented by the minority on this question, on this floor, have voted against it; and if these representatives have represented the views of their constituents correctly, it must follow, as inevitably as night follows day, that this plan cannot be accepted by the people of the State. Sir, the representatives of nearly three-fifths of the people have voted against it, while the delegates of only about two-fifths have voted for it.

Sir, that fact is ominous of its fate, unless it shall be accompanied with an alternative proposition, or some scheme by which its monstrous inequality can be remedied.

Now, Sir, let us have a system upon which we can unite. I prefer the plan of the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) but if we cannot have that, let us have the plan of the gentleman from Natick, (Mr. Wilson,) as a ground upon which we can stand; and we can say to the people, if you do not like this, you have the power to change it two years hence, and the power of obtaining something like an equal plan. It is true that bases it upon legal voters, but I am willing to put both House and Senate upon the basis of legal voters, if we cannot have them upon the principle of equality. For these reasons, I hope this Convention will have the good sense to secure the adoption of this Constitution, as I think they will, if they adopt either of these plans, but without which, I do not believe the people will accept of it.

Mr. ALVORD, for Montague. I think there are two fatal objections to the plan proposed by the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton). In the first place, by putting forth these three questions to be acted upon by the people at the same time, and in the manner proposed by him, his plan will practically defeat his object. Every man who prefers the existing system to either of those proposed, will, of course, vote upon the first question in the negative. Two other classes also will be likely to vote in the negative upon that question. Gentlemen who prefer the system proposed by this Convention, to the present existing system, but who yet fear the adoption of the district system, and would rather continue as we are than adopt that system, will vote "no" upon the first question, so as to make no change, because they fear that the effect of any change will be the adoption of the district system.

On the other hand, gentlemen who desire the district system, but who fear the adoption of the system proposed by this Convention, will, from the fear of that, vote "no" upon the first question. These three classes together will be likely to make a majority of "noes" on the first question, thus causing the defeat of both plans.

There is another fatal objection to the plan proposed by the gentleman from Taunton. Your system of representation in the Senate, as adopted by this Convention, is unfair, unjust, and unequal. That system of representation in the Senate gives to one voter in the county of Suffolk nearly three times the weight of a voter in the western part of the State. Well, Sir, if that system in relation to the Senate stands, there should be somewhere some counterbalancing advantage to the interior sections of the State. The interior finds its compensation, now, in the House of Representatives. But by the plan proposed by the gentleman from Taunton, if adopted, the cities will still have the advantage in the Senate, and the interior of the State will have no compensating advantage in the House of Representatives.

These are fatal objections, in my mind, to the plan proposed by the gentleman from Taunton. The proposition of the gentleman from Natick, obviates both of those objections. I stand here, Mr. President, as a friend of the system of representation which has been adopted by this Convention. I have voted for it on every division, and in each of its details; and I believe it will prove in its practical workings a fair, just, and equal system, reflecting the public sentiment of this State, as fairly, as justly, as any district system which the wit of man can devise. But, Mr. President, I acknowledge the binding force of that cardinal, republican, democratic doctrine, that the people have the right, at all times, to amend, alter, and totally change their organic law and frame of government. If the majority of the people of this State desire the district system; if it be true, as has been said here, that that majority wish that system incorporated into the organic law, they have the right to demand it at the hands of this Convention. We have no right to refuse it to them. And if their will is to have a system of districts, we cannot long withstand that will, even if we desire to do so. In a government like ours, and among a people like ours, the popular will soon breaks through any contrivance, however ingenious, to restrain it. If on the other hand a majority of the people do not desire the adoption of the district system, and I, in common with the other supporters of town representation believe that they do not, we, the friends of the representation of municipalities, have nothing to fear, and can lose nothing, by adopting the proposition of the gentleman from Natick. I regard that proposition as simply a contrivance for ascertaining what is the popular will upon this point. If that will is to have a system of representation by districts, then it neither can nor ought to be resisted. If that will is to have a system of representation by municipalities, then we lose nothing, we risk nothing by putting forth this proposition to the people. In either view it is wise to adopt it. I trust that the resolutions of the gentleman from Taunton will be rejected, and that the plan of the gentleman from Natick will be adopted.

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—ABBOTT—SARGENT—DURGIN.

[July 29th.]

Mr. ABBOTT, of Lowell. To the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, there is one objection, which in my mind, is conclusive. The proposition put forth by a majority of this Convention, and adopted now into the proposed Constitution, not only expresses a principle, but gives the details; it gives the manner of carrying it into operation, so that every voter in this Commonwealth, when he comes to vote upon that question, can see precisely how it is going to operate upon himself. Now, the objection I have, and have had throughout, to the district system, is that it is unfair for this reason: that those in favor of the district system merely enunciate a principle; simply say, that the Commonwealth shall be divided into districts, upon the principle of equality. That is easy enough to say, and every man can understand the principle. But, after you have enunciated the principle, it is quite a different thing; and not so easy a matter to carry that principle out into operation, so that the people shall be satisfied with the scheme carried into operation. In the one case, in the case of the basis adopted by the majority, you have the details, the body, the blood and the bones, and in the other case, you have merely the spirit without even a skeleton. Every man will see that the principle is right, that every person should have a political equality of rights; but, Sir, the difficulty is, in this Commonwealth, divided into towns as we are, to carry that into practical operation. I believe, that if any district system based upon equality, were absolutely reduced by this Convention to a system, and your districts were made, and, as made, put before the people, it would be the strongest argument used in favor of the system which we have adopted.

Now, Sir, I go for the proposition of the gentleman from Natick, for this reason: if the people of this Commonwealth do, in fact, desire the district system, I am quite content that they should try the other system, if they have the system reduced to a system. If they have the districts marked out and placed before them, I will be willing to go to the people of this Commonwealth, at any time within ten or fifteen years, with confidence, that they will reject any district system, whenever that system shall be reduced to practice, so that every man can see in what position he is putting himself by voting for it. Every man could look to his district and see where he was. Carry that into practice, and there will be no trouble about the district system. Sir, I have great confidence in the system which we have adopted. I believe there is great fairness in giving to the people of this Commonwealth, a majority of them, not a plurality, not a body chosen on our system, after having tried our system for two years, to say whether they will retain it, or whether they will have a district system when it is worked out in practice. But I do object to the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, which puts a mere principle to the people of this Commonwealth, and which does not put to them the practical workings of that principle, so that they can see for themselves for what they vote.

Mr. SARGENT, of Cambridge. The gentleman from Lowell, (Mr. Abbott,) objects to the proposition presented by the gentleman from Taunton, from the fact that it does not present the details of the system, and because, as he says, there is neither blood, nor bones, in the system—aye, not even a skeleton. Now he has voted for the district system for senators; he has put that before the people; and I ask him where the blood and the bones, or the skeleton of that system is? He there puts forth a principle, just as we propose to put it forth by the measure presented by the gentleman from Taunton, without the blood, the bones, or the skeleton. But he objects that we put the representative system forth upon the same basis. Now, I say to that gentleman in reply, if he is not afraid of his senatorial system, if he will give us the blood, the bones, or even the skeleton of those districts, we will give him the blood, and the bones, of our representative districts, and go with them before the people. That is what we wish to do.

Now, Sir, the gentleman says he puts this question into the hands of the majority of the people of the Commonwealth to decide. I take a different view of the subject; he puts it into the hands of the legislature, controlled by the friends of the very system you have adopted; a legislature elected under a system by which one-third part of the people, and they opposed to the system, have the power to say how these districts shall be formed, and they can, if they choose, form them in such a way that not ten thousand men in the Commonwealth will vote for them. You propose to put the question to the people in that way, and if they reject it, you will say they are not in favor of the district system. I say give us the alternative, and if the gentleman wants the districts drawn out, give us the senatorial districts upon which we can base it, and we will draw it out and put it to the people, with the blood and the bones in it, so that they can clearly comprehend it, and we will cheerfully abide the result.

Mr. DURGIN, from Wilmington. I may say I am deadly opposed to the district system, and, as I have said before upon this subject, I do not believe that the people of this Commonwealth desire it. If I really thought they did desire it, I should go for it. But, Sir, I should go for it on the same principles and for the same reasons that God gave to his ancient people a king. He gave them Saul, the son of Cis, who ruled them as with a rod of iron, until they had a king to their heart's content. So I might go for giving them a district system. But it is my opinion, that though the people might want a district system, yet it would be detrimental to the highest and lasting interests of the Commonwealth. This is my serious, solemn conviction. Now I want it distinctly understood, that if I go for the proposition of the gentleman from Natick, it will not be because of any want of confidence in the system adopted by this Convention. I have perfect confidence that the people will adopt it, notwithstanding the warm argument of my friend from Fall River, (Mr. Hooper). He was the warm friend of the district system, and that accounts for his warmth of soul upon the subject. But he sees, not with my glasses, or with my eyes, but his own. The district system will be attended with insuperable objections. You bring many of these towns together with diverse interests, and the match and marriage of them is not made by themselves, but by a foreign power. You bring these towns up, and say you want to unite them in wedlock. But they say we cannot submit to that. We cannot submit to being united to such and such a town, and, unless we have the power and the voice to determine the matter, we will not submit to it.

But if the people really desire it, as a kind of quietus, I don't know, after all, that I shall say no to that proposition, although my confidence in the present system is strong, and not at all weakened by any fear that the people will not approve of it. For the last fifteen years the small towns might have had the district system if they would. But there is not a single instance in which they came together.

If the system of the majority be adopted, the small towns have the privilege of coming together and forming districts, and some of the towns may, perhaps, avail themselves of the privilege, but you will not find a majority, if any of them, that will unite. I think, therefore, it is safe; it will do no good, and it will do no harm. Gentlemen are afraid of the press. Why, Sir, what harm can a newspaper article do? Anybody can write a newspaper article, but it will not produce any disastrous effects at all. I will not for a moment entertain the least degree of fear, or want of confidence in the system that has already been adopted in this Convention. If I vote for the amendment of my friend from Natick, I wish it to be understood that I vote for it, not because I have the least want of confidence in the system adopted by the majority, but for the sake of a quietus, to gratify the peculiar feelings of some of the members of the Convention, and perhaps of some people out of the Convention. That is the only reason why I vote for the amendment. And, Sir, if I vote for the amendment, it will be for this additional reason: that the district system there proposed is clear and distinct, and the people voting on it will act understandingly—act upon something not imaginary, but something tangible—something comprehensible.

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. — CHURCHILL — DAVIS — SCHOULER.

[July 29th.

Mr. CHURCHILL, of Milton. When this subject was under discussion, sometime since, I was in favor of the district system. I am still in favor of that system. But, Sir, although I should prefer to have the plan we have adopted wholly changed, or materially modified, still, as it is decidedly preferable to the old system, because it districts the cities, I think I can conscientiously support it, before the people, with most of the other reforms adopted by this Convention. Whether the proposition of the gentleman from Natick, (Mr. Wilson,) is accepted or not, I may therefore support the system adopted by the Convention, by my vote at the polls. Still, I trust, and sincerely hope, the proposition of the gentleman from Natick will be adopted. While it does not, necessarily, imply any want of confidence in the system which the Convention has seen fit to adopt, I believe it will add incalculable strength to the cause of reform. It will enlist in favor of the reforms submitted by the Convention, the support of many members of the majority in this Convention who have opposed your representative system. Sir, I believe, as has been stated by the gentleman from Lowell, (Mr. Butler,) there may be some doubt whether the district system, if submitted to the people, would be adopted by them. But I believe there is no danger or difficulty whatever, in submitting the alternative, and I ask those who have firmly and successfully stood by town representation, to give their friends who differ from them, an opportunity to submit the district system to the people. Whether the people are in favor of the system which has been adopted, or prefer the other, can only be known by voting in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from Natick, which submits both plans.

Mr. DAVIS, of Plymouth. I have uniformly recorded my vote against the proposition which has received the sanction of the Convention. But I feel it incumbent to say a few words in regard to the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) and that of the gentleman from Natick, (Mr. Wilson).

I consider myself, Mr. President, as fully and fairly beaten in the Convention, upon the question of representation. So far as my own views are concerned, I have not been convinced, as the gentleman states he has, of the fairness, the justice, and the equality of the system of representation which has been adopted here. But inasmuch as it has received the full, and apparently the hearty sanction of the majority of the Convention, I think it is not for us who are in the minority, to think we can exact terms upon which we are to get a more equal system of representation. We all agree that the system submitted by the gentleman from Natick is more equal than that adopted by the Convention; and if the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton is voted down, I shall vote for it. It is not for us to dictate the terms upon which the question is to be submitted to the people, and for one, I am willing to take what I can get. I think it my duty, at this time, to go for what the majority are willing to give us upon this question.

Now, Sir, for one, I should greatly prefer that a proposition should be submitted to the people, at this time, like, or something like, that proposed by the gentleman from Taunton. I can see no real objection to offering it as an alternative proposition. I see no reason why it should be regarded as disastrous to the proposition presented by the majority; but I see sufficient reason for it, in the fact that it would present an answer to the argument which has been repeatedly presented here—which was conclusive in the mind of the gentleman from Marshfield, whose speech, permit me to say, it seemed to me, was stronger in the head than in the tail. His argument was founded—if I understood him rightly—upon the supposition that the people were not ready for the district system. Another gentleman took the same ground in his argument. They are in favor of the district system, but give their sanction to the system proposed by the majority, upon the ground that the people are not prepared to receive the district system. The same argument prevailed in a previous Convention. It is an argument that has thus far been fatal to the district system, and for this reason, if for no other, I am in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, for the purpose—if I may be allowed the expression—of clinching the nail, and of giving the people one opportunity of saying for themselves, whether they are ready for the district system or not. How long are we to reform the Constitution, and call Constitutional Conventions in Massachusetts, and allow the argument—which, I must confess, savors rather too much of the politician, which looks a little too much like being designed to tickle the ears of the people—to prevail, that the people are not yet prepared to receive the district system? When are you going to find out whether the people are ready or not? Now I submit that here is an opportunity presented, in the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, for solving that problem—of ascertaining whether the people are ready or not, without hazarding the other reforms which you propose—without hazarding the adoption of the Constitution as a whole. If you do not distrust the system you have recommended, why not give the people an opportunity of saying which they like best? Why allow the argument to be adduced, year after year, against the district system, that the people are not ready to receive it, without giving them an opportunity of verifying the assertion?

It is for that reason, that I prefer we should submit at this time alternative propositions. I do not believe the people are so weak, so ignorant, or so confused, that they cannot read and understand two propositions at the same time. I do not believe, either, that if we present a district system, the people ask to have the districts cut and dried beforehand. I believe there is sense and justice enough in Massachusetts, in the minds of the people, to say whether they are in favor of a district system, each district to be comprised of an equal number of voters or inhabitants, as the case may be, without waiting to see whether the line will cut through the corner of this town or the corner of that. I am opposed to a district system that shall divide the small towns; but I can see no good reason why the general proposition of a district system should not be submitted at this time to the people, as an alternative proposition.

But, Sir, I rose merely to state my views upon these propositions, and not to go into any argument upon them. I am willing to vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Natick, believing that I cannot get the other proposition. I will go for submitting a proposition to the people for a district system, founded upon voters, for the purpose of allowing the people the opportunity of once expressing their minds upon this subject; and I do not see how they are to have the opportunity, unless we accept the proposition of the gentleman from Natick. If it is true, as gentlemen agree, that the people are not prepared for such a system, I am in favor of giving them an opportunity of saying to their fellow-citizens and the world, that they believe a republican commonwealth cannot exist here in New England, founded upon an equal and just representation of the popular sovereignty. I want them to have the opportunity of saying they believe a House should be made into a Senate, and founded upon corporate sovereignty, and that the Senate should be made into a House, the strongest element in which shall be the city of Boston.

Since the debates in Committee of the Whole upon the system which the Convention has sanctioned, have been published—for I did not have the pleasure of hearing them—I have read them, and I am more and more convinced that we have adopted a system of representation, by which, in principle, we have turned the House of Representatives into a Senate, and made the county of Franklin and the western counties of the State, with their corporate town rights, the strongest element of power, while we have made the Senate the popular branch, and we have made the non-voters of the city of Boston the strongest element of power there. Sir, I am in favor of submitting some proposition to the people which shall provide for more equal representation.

Mr. SCHOULER, of Boston. The proposition of the gentleman from Taunton (Mr. Morton) is a clean, clear proposition. It is one that everybody understands. It brings the question, whether you will adopt a district system, before the people some two years sooner than under the proposition proposed by the gentleman from Natick. It brings it before them at a time when they are called upon to consider and decide other questions of fundamental law, and therefore there is a propriety about it. It is connected with the adoption of the Constitution as amended, and will come before the people at a time when their attention is called to the subject. I am surprised to hear the gentleman from Fall River (Mr. Hooper) give up this proposition without a trial, because he thinks it cannot be carried. Sir, we should never carry anything, in this or any other body, if the friends of the measure give way for fear they shall not. Why not stand up for the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, until it is voted down, and then we can try something else—perhaps the proposition of the gentleman from Natick. But, Sir, I wish to call the attention of the Convention to the details of that proposition. If the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton is voted down—and I hope it will not be—then we must take the proposition of the gentleman from Natick, or nothing. Now, Sir, that amendment does not provide for submitting the question to the people, in 1856, fairly. It is to be submitted in a way that will be sure to kill the district system, if anything can, because there never was any measure so complicated as the details of a district system must necessarily be, that did not gain enemies. If you submit the details of the system along with the system itself, I care not with how much fairness the districts may be apportioned, some towns will want to be in another district, some towns will complain because they are divided, and others because they are not divided; and therefore, they will vote down the whole system. It will not be submitting the question, whether there shall be a district system, fairly to the people. If the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton is voted down, I shall then submit an amendment to the proposition of the gentleman from Natick, to strike out that portion of it which provides for submitting the details of the district system, so that the plain, clear proposition may be presented to the people in 1856, whether there shall be a district system for the election of representatives and for the election of senators, founded upon legal voters or upon population, as the case may be. I cannot understand why gentlemen should wish to legislate in the Constitution upon this subject; for it is legislation, and nothing but legislation. What we want in the Constitution is principle, and not the details of legislation. Sir, I tell gentlemen there is something behind all this. These details are put in to kill the proposition itself when it goes out to the people. It is only presented as a sort of decoy duck, to draw votes for the system the majority have adopted.

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. — SCHOULER — BUTLER.

[July 29th.

Sir, I can see no argument against such an amendment as I have indicated, to strike out the details of the system which it is proposed to submit. Let us have the plain proposition presented to the people in 1856, whether they will have a district system, or not. I am willing to take the proposition of the gentleman from Natick, with that amendment, if the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton is voted down.

But, what do we really gain by such a proposition to submit the question to the people in 1856? The legislature may, at its next session, if it chooses, submit the question to be voted on by the people in 1855. They have the power, under the Constitution, to submit the question to the people at any time. But, if the proposition of the gentleman from Natick, is put forth as a compromise, and if the gentlemen of this Convention will vote to strike out of that proposition its detail, so that the people may have the opportunity to vote yea or nay upon the principles of the district system, without being encumbered by the details—by the division of towns, for and by local questions as to the formation of districts—I will vote to incorporate it into the Constitution; but, unless such an amendment is adopted, I shall vote against it, because it is all a sham, and nothing but a sham, to get votes for the Constitution.

I would rather have the Constitution remain as it is. I hope those gentlemen who are in favor of a district system, will vote in favor of a district system, and in that category I hope to find the gentleman from Fall River, (Mr. Hooper); and if that proposition be voted down, I hope the proposition of the gentleman from Natick, will be either amended or rejected.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. The Convention having adopted, as the basis of representation, the plan which I had simply the honor of selecting from the various plans proposed, not claiming for it any originality, I deem it not out of order, nor improper, that I should say a word upon this plan which is now proposed. And I wish to say, first and foremost, that my judgment continues to approve of the plan of representation by towns. And, in any event, whatever may happen, until I am much better advised than at present, I shall vote for, and advocate to the extent of the poor ability God has given me, town representation. But, Sir, it is proposed on the other hand, that there should be a system of district representation left to the people, and we are sometimes taunted with being afraid of the people. Now, Sir, I am not afraid of submitting to the people any fair proposition. And if I considered the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton a fair one—not that he has meant anything wrong by it—but if I considered it a fair proposition, as opposed to town representation, I would vote to have it go to the people. But I do not so consider it; on the other hand, that the plan which was suggested by the gentleman from Natick, has the elements of fairness as opposed to town representation, and I am willing to try the sense of the people upon it, if the Convention are so willing.

I will give my reasons for the distinction. Every man knows the disadvantages of town representation; every man sees the boundary of the town he lives in; every man knows exactly where the town lines are; he has it all mapped out in his mind and laid down, fixed and determined. But, the system of the gentleman from Taunton, is an ideal system, a theoretical system which is made on paper without being mapped out, and is made, when voted for, in the mind of every voter, as his own interest dictates. Every man who favors it, says I am in favor of it; first, because it is just, and I am in favor of it secondly, because, whatever I find bad in town representation, I can have remedied in my district. That district will be made just so as to suit me, I shall be exactly satisfied and contented in that district. Each man makes in his own fancy, a beau idéal district, with all the pleasantest men he can think of around him, and he puts himself in the centre of that district and sees himself elected to the legislature from the district, and so hurras for the district system. This happens from a beau idéal; from every man making a system to suit his own mind. But, when a district system is sent out to the people, I want one as the towns are, mapped out, the lines running here, taking in this neighbor and leaving that one out; bringing in this valley and that mountain, so that it can be seen that it brings this set of men and that set of men together. Then we can see the difference, and see what there is of it, and see what you mean. And I can tell you it will look as different to men after they see its beauties, and its defects, as they are made apparent, as the angel girl some men court, looks different from the slut-like wife they find they have married. [Laughter.] One is all that is lovely, and good, and beautiful; the other is a very different affair. So let me tell gentlemen it will be with the district system. Leave every man to make a district to his own mind, and he will make a splendid district, having everything of beauty and equality in it. But, if he at first sees the lines are to be run here, and the lines run there, he will not accept it.

I was neither amazed nor surprised when our friends from Boston wanted to district their city for common councilmen; they did not put it on population, for it might have brought Beacon Street near to Ann Street; they took a basis which has been taken in this proposition, founded upon legal voters. I do not desire that every man shall make the lines to suit himself. I want Beacon Street to see that she is in juxtaposition with Ann Street, and then see if Beacon Street would vote for the district. I want Fall River and Hull put in juxtaposition, and see if they will vote for such a district. When this is done, I am ready that such a district system shall go out to the Commonwealth. But when you get the ideal beauty and the theoretical constitution which the French theorists made, it is a cheat and a humbug, and men are voting for what they do not want.

Mr. SCHOULER. May I ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, if you will be quick, as my time is limited.

Mr. SCHOULER. I would like to know if the district system for senators which the gentleman voted for, is an ideal system?

Mr. BUTLER. O, yes, Sir; and this is just the difference; and I will give you a comparison. The senatorial district system will cut the Commonwealth into forty districts. It will make the same difference that there is between cutting up a pig into four quarters, and cutting him into sausage meat. [Laughter.] I understand the senatorial division to be the cutting into four quarters; but when you come to sausage meat, I wish to know whether I shall get the piece I prefer. That is the difference, and that is the trouble I have with the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton.

Mr. SCHOULER. As I understand the distinction which the gentleman makes, it is that he prefers the whole hog rather than the pieces.

Mr. BUTLER. Precisely. Then I would not have gentlemen build too much on my comparison; I made it for the gentleman from Boston. That is the difference I make. I wish to know which piece I am to have—whether I am to have the snout or the rib; I want to know where I am to come in for a share. Then I can know how to vote. Every man, when he goes for the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, expects to get the middleings.

.. The reason why I support this form of district system is, because I am in favor of town representation, and I mean to fight for it and stand by it to the extent of my strength. But I do not think there is any more danger of the adoption of a district system, where we know the lines, than there is of Cape Cod moving up to Berkshire. It is an old maxim, "egnotum pro magnifico"—the unknown is taken for the magnificent; "distance lends enchantment to the view," and want of knowledge has much the same effect. I want to ask Berkshire when, by a district system, it is proposed to be put alongside of Cape Cod—now, are you ready for that, or do you want to stay by the old town? Now, as I have said, to prevent that result, we can give the power to the legislature to make the districts. Or we may make the system, and it will be so bad that the people will not accept it. I would be willing to take the system published by the able and intelligent editor of the Advertiser, in his paper, as the district system. I should be willing to go to the people to-day, to know whether they would accept that system or the town system, and abide the answer. I would be willing to have that put to the people now; only give me something practical, something tangible, something that we may see, that we can talk about and can point out. I grant that the gentleman from Boston (Mr. Schouler) is quite right, that if we make a district system so that you can see the corners, it will not be adopted. I know it. He says it will bring up objections to it. I know it. I wish to see those objections fairly tested. How does the gentleman from Natick propose to do it? He proposes to leave the legislature to do it. If we had time to make it, we could do it; but we have not, and we say we will leave it to the legislature. Let no man say you will have unequal districts. Your population basis for the senate will help to make the districts. Then make the districts, make them as well as God has given to human ingenuity to devise, and I do not care; they will fall to pieces as soon as flax, which "falls asunder at the touch of fire." You cannot make them so well but that they will crumble to pieces. But when you can allow every man to fancy a district as a beau ideal of his mind, or as an illusion of a dream, he will make utopian districts alone, and I fear to put that to the people as a delusion which tends to lead their minds away from the reality. Therefore, as at present advised, I must vote against the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, as I always have voted against it.

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. — BUTLER — GARDNER — BATES.

[July 29th.

But, on the other hand, to show that I am not afraid of the people; to show that I am ready to go to them with a district system which will be tangible, the lines of which we can know and see, as town lines are seen and known, I am ready to vote for the plan suggested by the gentleman from Natick, to wit: Let the people ask the legislature to make the districts; and, then, in God's name, if they want the system, let them have it; and, if they do not want it, I am sure I do not wish to have them adopt it. These are my reasons for voting against the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, and in favor of that of the gentleman from Natick. If other gentlemen approve them, I trust they will go with me; if not, I shall at least have the privilege of putting myself right before the Convention.

Mr. GARDNER, of Boston. The cat is out of the bag. Let the phonographic reporters of this Convention put it down in black and white; let the people of this Commonwealth know the statements made by the gentleman from Lowell. What are they? He is afraid to trust the people. His own words. He is afraid to let the people say whether they will have single districts or not. His own words. He is afraid the Utopian scheme may be carried. His own words. He is afraid—

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President—

Mr. GARDNER. I presume the gentleman will withdraw his words.

Mr. BUTLER. No, Sir; I will not withdraw anything. I wish only to have that stated which I did say. I deny that I said what he has stated. That is as wide a mistake as he made before.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman will deny it. But he is afraid to have this question go out to the people, for fear they may decide to have the district system; he is afraid the utopian delusion may beguile them; and he therefore fears a popular majority may decide in favor of a district system, if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Taunton is carried.

Now, what is he afraid of? He has told us that too. He has, very fortunately, kindly told us, what he is not afraid of, as well as what he does fear. Now, what is it? He is willing to adopt the proposition of the gentleman from Natick; he is willing to send to the people a district system, provided it is cut and carved beforehand; because, says the gentleman from Lowell, I know that will not be adopted. Now, is not this plain to the Convention? Is not this perfectly absurd, and nonsense, and ridiculous, to endeavor to present a scheme for our adoption, which the gentleman rises in his place and says of it, I know that it will not be adopted. Now, I put it to him; if it does not convince him, I put it to other members of the Convention, if it is not the height of absurdity for us to pretend to adopt the scheme of the gentleman from Natick, which he has given notice of, when he rises and says, I know it will not be adopted. Sir, he has confessed, not in language but in fact, his intention to throw dust in the eyes of the people; to hold out to them a pretended proposition, with the pretence of fairness, which, he says, he knows they will never adopt? Now, for one, I despise any such proposition; I disdain and spurn the bribe; I will not vote for anything that I know the people will never sanction. The time of this Convention is too precious; the purpose for which we were sent here is too sacred to trifle in such a way with our constituents.

Now, we have here a tangible and distinct proposition, and I desire that the feelings and views of the Convention shall be fairly and freely expressed upon it. It is simply, in a few short sentences, the opportunity of presenting the alternative to the people of the Commonwealth, to allow the legislature to district the State into equal districts for the choice of representatives, in contradistinction to town representation. This, Sir, is fair, is honest; and I appeal to every member of this Convention, that were it a question between man and man, of simple every day honesty and morality, could he oppose it? But, when we come here under our sacred oaths of office; when we come here as representatives of the Commonwealth; when we are their exponents, and when their feelings, views, and wishes are doubted or denied here; can we then, as honest, and fair, and just men, refuse to submit an ultimate decision to that great tribunal? We shall soon know who, here, are willing to trust the people. Aye, more, we shall know who are willing that the people shall decide which system they prefer.

This is a question which is separated from party politics; it is a question which ought not and cannot, be justly mixed up with any party sentiment whatever. It is simply a question whether the people who sent us here shall prefer, and wish, and require, one of two plain propositions.

Now, Sir, what arguments can be brought, what reasons can be given, why this should not be sent to the people to decide? It is said here, by the gentleman from Natick, that he fears this question may cause confusion at the polls. I can tell him that the people of this Commonwealth value too highly equal representation; the people of this Commonwealth are too intelligent, and they know too well the value of equal representation, to allow a plain abstract question of this kind to cause confusion at the polls. There are too many churches and too many school-houses in this Commonwealth, if not in Natick, to permit the people to become confused by a plain proposition of this kind. I would as soon suppose a gentleman would say they would be confused if a man should put the question to them whether two and two make four, as that they would be confused by a proposition of this kind. If you ask the people whether two men in Barnstable should equal one man in Franklin, or whether one man in Franklin should outweigh seven or eight men in Suffolk, the people would be confused, and cannot give an honest, mathematical answer! Is that the sentiment, is that the opinion the gentleman from Natick entertains of the people of Massachusetts? He is afraid they will be disturbed and confused by a question so papable as that. That is the idea at which he is alarmed. I ask this Convention if they go with him in the fear?

Now, I should like to have gentlemen rise and state what possible objection there can be to this proposition, except the alarming, wonderful objection which the gentleman from Lowell has already stated, the objection that he is afraid lest the people will adopt this proposition, if it is sent to them. If that is the argument, I hold that it is conclusive that every member of this House should send the proposition to the people. He begs the question, or rather he acknowledges the necessity of the question; he acknowledges that the people want it; he confesses they will adopt it. Therefore, I say we are bound, by his own showing, to send it to them, and let them have the opportunity of trial.

Mr. BATES, of Plymouth. I have but a very few words to say, and will detain the Convention but a few moments in this stage of the debate upon the question now before us. I have listened with attention, for weeks, to the discussions upon the question of representation, without having participated in that debate. When I have heard gentlemen, in derogation of the system of town representation which has been adopted by this Convention, so repeatedly make the assertion which has just been made by the gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Gardner), that one man in Franklin equals five or six in Suffolk, and when I have known at the same time, that this Convention, with but four or five dissenting votes, has formed a district system, which in the election of senators and councillors, gives to Suffolk County—a county which for the last twenty years has cast less than one-half as many votes in proportion to its population, as the county of Franklin—its full representation upon a population basis, I have been strongly tempted to rise in my place and say that I disdained any such comparison, but I have not done so. I came here, Sir, a friend to town representation, as a question of principle, nor have I yet heard any arguments which have shaken my convictions of its justice; and when I voted for a district system for senators and councillors, upon a basis of population, I did so with the expectation, if not with the understanding, that there was to be an equivalent in the establishment of a basis of town representation for the House of Representatives, and nothing but such an expectation would have induced me to cast such a vote. Now, if there is any one act of mine in this Convention which I believe my constituents will disapprove of more than any other, it is, that in some stages of the question—though not on the final passage—I supported a population basis of representation for the Senate.

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. — BATES — HALLETT.

[July 29th.]

But, Sir, that act has passed, and I apprehend this Convention is not to reconsider or reconstruct it. Then we have adopted a system of town representation for the House of Representatives. I am not of that class of individuals who are frightened by the bugbear stories about this basis being unjust or unpopular, or that it is to transfer our whole government into the hands of a very small portion of the people; and least of all, am I alarmed at the newspaper paragraphs in regard to it, to which my friend from Wilmington, (Mr. Durgin,) has alluded.

Now, here is a proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) and what is it? Why, it is said that it submits to the people a district system. What is the fact with regard to it? The moment it is contemplated to complete the system before it is submitted to the people, the gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Schouler,) rises in apparent alarm, and says, that if you make these districts so that the people can look at them, they will reject the proposition. This, to my mind, is the strongest argument which can be adduced to prove that the people do not want a district system. Construct the districts just as they must be constructed, ultimately, and let the people see their boundaries, their advantages and their disadvantages, and the admission of the most ardent friends of the system is, that they will reject it. But, it is said, put it to the people, and let them "go it blind," as the saying is, and then if they do not like the districts, when they are subsequently constructed, they cannot help themselves. And yet, these are the men who claim to be the exclusive friends of the people. Now, if I have to put anything to the people of Massachusetts, I would put to them something which is tangible, something which can be seen and understood, and then if the people want it, I want them to have it. I am the last man to distrust the people. And, when this proposition comes up here, and it is admitted over and over again that if you put the system in detail to the people, they will reject it, I say that I am opposed to it, here, and elsewhere. I have said that I was a friend of town representation, and whatever influence I may have, if I have any, and whatever ability I possess, in the canvass which is before us, shall be exerted in support of that system; because, I believe it to be just, and that it will most effectually preserve the glorious institutions of our Commonwealth. And, I desire to tender my thanks to the gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Hale,) for having submitted to the public in detail, the proposition of the minority of the Committee, which has been rejected by this Convention; because, that course will materially aid the friends of town representation, in establishing the justice of their system before the people.

But, Sir, what is this proposition of a district system? It is that you put the question to the people, and let the legislature make the districts. Now, if the legislature must make the districts, why not let them make them first? What is there to fear? We have been repeatedly told here that we fear the people. Now, I would ask whether it is those who say let the legislature make the districts, and then let the people say whether they want the districts as made, or whether it is those who say if you want a district system, we will make the districts afterwards to suit themselves. Which is it? I apprehend that no man will rise and say that it is the class of men who put to the people what they must ultimately have, that they may see for what they vote, who betray this distrust of the people.

Now, Sir, for these reasons, I am totally opposed to putting out this intangible system of the gentleman from Taunton. The people cannot see it, and cannot decide whether they want it or not. If districts are to be made, let them be constructed first, and then the people will have something which is tangible, and which they can understand, and if they want it they are competent to say so, and with their verdict, I shall be content. I had not intended to support any alternate proposition, but the gentleman from Natick has submitted a plan which I have not before seen, but which, as it appears at first blush, or upon the face of it, I am induced to support, because it appears to be fair, just and equal. It says to the legislature elected by the people with a knowledge of their duties, that they shall make these districts in the best manner they can, and in 1855 submit them to the people, and if those districts are just, and the people approve of them, they will say so by their votes. I shall vote for that proposition, if I have an opportunity to do so, because it carries justice upon the face of it.

But there is another strong reason why I shall vote for it. At the same time it presents to the people of Massachusetts the question of having forty senatorial districts upon the basis of legal voters. This is a question which I wish the people of the Commonwealth to have an opportunity to pass upon. They will first say if they will have a senatorial basis upon population, which gives to fourteen hundred immigrants who happen to land in Boston on the day previous to taking the decennial census, as much representation as five independent towns in the Commonwealth, by giving to those towns a partial equivalent in the House, and at the same time it gives them an opportunity to decide between this and a district system based upon the legal voters of the State. Under these circumstances, I shall support the proposition of the gentleman from Natick, if it comes before the Convention. I am opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, and shall vote against it. For these reasons, and these only, am I induced to vote to submit an alternate proposition to the people, inasmuch as it says to them, you see what it is; if you want it, vote for it; if you do not want it, vote against it; and the question is settled, and that, too, by the only tribunal which has a right to make the decision, and whose judgment is final.

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham. I am greatly obliged to the Chair for the privilege of the floor. I have been put wrong here for a day or two, and I find myself placed in a somewhat indefinite position. I think it is necessary for us who have advocated town representation, to look back and see what the basis upon which we stand is. I have been advocating, with other gentlemen, the right of towns, as several communities and municipal corporations, to representation. There were gentlemen who contended that this claim of the towns was not right or well founded, and that there should be a district system disregarding all town rights. Now, a proposition is submitted by the gentleman from Natick, which gives them the opportunity to propose to the people just what they want, if they honestly expressed what they wanted. Why do the advocates of a district system now oppose this fair offer? It seems to me there is the same inconsistency in some gentlemen in regard to this question, which I noticed when we sought to compromise on the plurality question. I and others wished to retain the majority system, and voted for the majority principle. But the moment a sufficient number to make a majority for plurality, of those gentlemen who had acted with us voted for the plurality system, those who had before most vehemently insisted on a plurality, came right round and voted against the plurality system. So that the question seemed not to be acted upon from principle, but as to who made the proposition, and how it would affect parties. Shall we take such a view of subjects here? It is neither wise nor expedient to do so. How do we know what will be the effect upon parties of any rule we lay down, that will last for any long period?

Having explained this position, in which I am content to stand on the record, I wish to answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Crowninshield,) who desires to know what reasons there are why the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton should not be submitted, as a part of the Constitution, to the people. I can give him the best reason in the world, and I think a perfectly conclusive reason why I cannot go for that proposition, and why it seems to me no gentleman should go for it. And that is, because it leaves to the legislature an unrestricted power to make the Constitution in that particular, instead of having the people make it, or pass upon it after the legislature propose it; and I deny the right or the power of the legislature to make any part of a Constitution. What is the proposition? Why, that you shall give to the legislature the power to determine, without appeal to the people, whether the whole principle of representation in Massachusetts, which has stood for two hundred years, shall be entirely changed or not. I would just as soon give to the legislature the power to determine, without asking the people, whether this government shall be a republican government or a monarchy. That is the objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton; because he proposes that we shall put the question to the people in the abstract: "Will you have a district system, or not, for representatives?" And if the people should say, "Why, yes, we will have a district system," what do they answer? and what is the effect, if this proposition prevails? It is carrying out the theory of certain gentlemen who propose to submit to the people the question whether they will have a Convention, and then, after the people answer "yes," leaving the whole power with the legislature to make that Convention what they please, or repeal it when they please. This was just the doctrine on which the attorney-general told us that our present Convention was called; but we repudiated it as wholly unsound doctrine.

Mr. HATHAWAY, of Freetown. I would inquire if we are not in the same position with regard to the Senate?

Mr. HALLETT. I think the gentleman was answered, with reference to that, by the gentleman from Lowell, (Mr. Butler). That is not my point. It does not affect town rights or representation. The proposition now before us, of the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) gives to the legislature the whole power, at its mere pleasure, of dividing, and cutting, and carving this whole Commonwealth into representative districts,

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—HALLETT—WHITNEY.

[July 29th.

without the control, or consent, or subject to the veto of the people! That is the proposition. Therefore, I say it is giving to the legislature the power of prescribing what the limit and what the basis of your representation shall be in this Commonwealth, and what party shall be in the ascendency. We go quite far enough in doing that to which the gentleman from Freetown has alluded, in districting for Senators. Yes, Sir, we go quite far enough in leaving the legislature to make forty senatorial districts. But that is senatorial representation, and does not affect town rights. Senatorial representation does not exist as a locality, or as a corporate right of a municipal community. But the right of representation in towns exists as a corporate right which you have no right to destroy, unless by the representative consent of those who now enjoy it. That is a fundamental principle, and you must either adhere to town representation on that principle, or abandon it. If those who adhere to town representation as a right, cannot stand there, they cannot stand anywhere. Now, as this is an inherent right of the original organization of Massachusetts representation, and as towns are constituted upon corporate or community representation, I say you have no right to give to the legislature the exclusive power over a question which may, in their disposition of it, destroy that right without the consent of the people.

That is a fatal and inherent objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, and it is inadmissible, as it seems to me, upon any principle on which we stand here as a representative body.

On the other hand, the provisional proposition submitted as a compromise by the gentleman from Natick, is in conformity with the rights of the towns, and the rights of the people to pass upon a distinct question of district representation.

First, it provides that all the towns, by their representatives in the House, shall have the right to be heard in preparing the details of the system of districting the State, which the legislature are required to submit to the people. Secondly, it provides that the whole people may have a district system of representation according to the plan submitted to them, whenever the aggregate majority shall consent to adopt it. That will present the question of districting to the people in a tangible form, and they will decide upon it by a majority of the whole people, including all the towns. Now, Sir, it is conclusive, that if gentlemen who advocate a district system are desirous of having the question fairly put to the people, not in the abstract, but in well-considered detail, here is the best, surest, and fairest plan that can be devised for testing the question, by a direct, distinct vote upon it of the whole people of the Commonwealth, in which vote the cities and large towns will have all the benefit of their numbers in determining the majority.

The plan is throughout the result of representative and popular action. In the first place, the system of exact details and limits must be prepared and submitted to the Senate and House, who have got to put it forth to the people.

Who are to consent to it? Why, the legislature, who will be the representatives of all the towns in one branch of it, and without whose action this cannot be done; and if it is done by their action it is done by their consent. They, as the representatives of these communities, must agree to submit a district proposition to the people, which is to divide the State off into two hundred and forty or three hundred and twenty representative districts. Then you have the consent of the representatives of the towns to the form of proposition, and, consequently, the consent of the whole constituency that such a proposition should be submitted to the people. If the people adopt it, they adopt the proposition distinctly and definitely, and with their eyes open. And thus this plan, passed upon by the people in all its details, and not in the abstract merely, will save the State from that gerrymandering system which would be the result of the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton. Sir, the moment you put it into the power of the legislature to frame and adopt a system of districts for representatives without going to the people, from that moment you determine the political character of the Commonwealth by the political character of the one particular legislature which districts the State. That is perfectly clear. Contiguity can easily be evaded in order to give a party majority. You may have your districts formed of contiguous territory, and yet you can take a narrow strip of land in this or that town or city as the nucleus of a district, and add to it such other portions, according to the political complexion of these portions to be added, and make a district of any politics you please. Everybody knows what gerrymandering can do to secure the control to a minority by ingenious districting of sections; and this, it would seem, is one of the most corrupt and corrupting powers the legislature can have. But if the legislature know that the people have the power, by a vote of the whole Commonwealth, to repudiate the project which they may put out, the people have a reasonable guarantee that the system will be based and arranged according to just rules. I see no inconsistency, therefore, in meeting those who are in favor of the district system, by saying, we will put into the Constitution, not an alternative proposition of town or district system, which looks as if we did not know what we were about, but an alternative power. We have put into the Constitution the town system of representation, and recommended to the people to take that if they desire it; and then we may say by this amendment, if you desire, through the power of your legislature, to make a change to a district system, here is the form to give the legislature the power to propose it. If we are to submit the district system to the people, we ought to submit it in detail, that each town may know who is to be its neighbor. This is not the place to do it. It consists of lines and boundaries and cities and towns and villages and relative population, and various other matters requiring a most minute examination, before it can be fairly adjusted and adopted. I say, therefore, if there is an honest purpose to test the question before the people, whether they will have the district system or not, the proposition of the gentleman from Natick presents it; while, at the same time, it is consistent with the views of those who adhere to the principle that the towns shall have their inherent corporate rights in the representative hall, and that no change in the representative system should take place without their action and consent. I hope, therefore, that the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton will be disposed of by being rejected, and then the question will be fairly open to this compromise proposition.

Mr. WHITNEY, of Conway. At this late hour of the session, it seems to me that it is but wasting time to enter again into the discussion of principles which lie at the foundation either of the town or district systems of representation. Much better would it be, both for ourselves and our constituents, to look and see where we stand in reference to this great question. A great conflict in the Convention, from the commencement of its session to the present time, has been had upon this question of representation; and, however it may appear to other gentlemen, it is obvious to me, that if there is anything established by our past action, if we have arrived at any positive and determinate result in this Convention, we have arrived at the result embracing town representation as a principle, which is to go from this Convention to the people, and that the district system cannot be adopted here.

Now, Sir, I admire the perseverance of the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) and of other gentlemen who have advocated the district system here; but I do not believe that the gentleman from Taunton, nor any other gentleman from anywhere else, favoring the district system, supposes that this Convention, after our past action, and after the long discussions we have had, and the repeated calls for the yeas and nays—I say I do not believe that any one seriously supposes that this Convention, after all this, is to adopt the district system, and submit it to the people, instead of the system of town representation which we have adopted.

Well, Sir, that being an established fact—and I appeal to gentlemen on this floor if it is not an established fact—it seems to me to be an endless waste of time for gentlemen to get up here and argue in favor of the district system, and say that we are afraid to trust the people. Why, Sir, we have prepared a system which we propose to submit to the people, and we believe that the people will sustain it. Is there any fear manifested there? Why, Sir, it is our unbounded confidence in the people that induces us to offer this proposition to them.

But, Sir, there are other gentlemen who stand up here and say that we are deceived in our judgment in regard to the wishes of the people—that the people do not desire town representation; that in this particular we labor under a mistake. However that may be, I regard the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton as involving a question which has been settled here again and again as a question to be rejected, because if it is adopted, it certainly works the death of the proposition in favor of town representation; because, as the gentleman from Montague has said, the friends of the existing system, who are opposed to the town system, and the friends of the district system, will combine against the town system; and, on the other hand, the friends of the present system who are opposed to the district system, will join with the friends of the town system; and thus you will kill both propositions. It does not seem to be wise to adopt any proposition which may have such a tendency. What, then, is it proposed to do? The gentleman from Natick offers a proposition—a proposition which I must confess I have never seen nor heard of until this morning; it is entirely new to me—which strikes me as having the elements of fairness in it,

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. — WHITNEY — GARDNER — BANKS.

[July 29th.]

and which ought to command the support of the friends of the district system. Here it is, a complete district system in itself, which we propose to submit to the people, as soon as we have had time sufficiently to mature it. It proposes that the legislature, in 1855, or 1856, shall submit a system of districts to the people, based upon legal voters; and if the people adopt it, that is to be your system, and it is to supplant your system of town representation. And now, I ask gentlemen, what can be more fair, or more just? The legislature of 1854 must prepare a district system in relation to the Senate. That system will go to the people, and they will have acted upon it one year, and will have become informed in regard to its operations; and then the next legislature—that is, the legislature of 1856, elected in 1855—is to prepare a district system of representation for the House of Representatives. They are to perfect it here; and it is not to be supposed that they are to gerrymander in making this district system. We know not, Sir, what is in the future in reference to political action or political power; no man knows who is to be in authority in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in 1856; but the legislature, coming fresh from the people, and representing the wishes of the people, will prepare a district system of representation for the House of Representatives, and submit it to the people; and the whole people are to pass upon it; and if they adopt that system it supplants your system of town representation throughout Massachusetts.

Now, Sir, all this talk among gentlemen, of our "fearing to trust the people," sounds well enough, but, let me ask, is there any foundation for it? Is there, anywhere, any evidence that the men who support the proposition of the gentleman from Natick, do, in the least, fear to trust the people in this matter? So far from that being the case, we make it imperative for the legislature to submit a district system to the people, so that they may have a fair opportunity, after reasonable deliberation, of saying whether they will adopt it, or adhere to their old system of town representation. It is not left, like some other matters, either to the will or the discretion of the legislature, but is imperative upon them, if this Constitution is adopted by the people. They must submit it to their determination; there is no alternative. If a majority of the voters of the State adopt the system, then it is, unequivocally, your system for the future. Is there any distrust here? I must confess that I favor the town system; and I favor it honestly, because I honestly believe that the people of Massachusetts prefer that system to any other. Other gentlemen, however, imagine that I am mistaken, and contend that the people prefer the district system. To those gentlemen I now reply: "Prepare your district system, and send it out to the people, and let them vote upon it, man for man, and head for head, as one gentleman said in an early stage of the consideration of this subject; and, if the voice of the majority is in favor of such system, why, in all conscience, let them have it." Is that not fair? Why, then, do we hear all this talk about "doubting the people" and "fearing to trust the people?" The proposition made here is perfectly fair. As I have already stated, it is unquestionably a settled point by the Convention, that the town system is to go before the people first. No one can expect anything else from the various expressions of opinion we have had here, as well as the votes we have taken. We have had the yeas and nays upon it half a dozen times, and it is now too late, in almost the last hour of the session, to expect that any other course of action will be pursued by this body.

Sir, I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Natick. It is due to him, and it is also due to myself, to say, that I had no hand in maturing it; I only know it as I have heard it read; but it strikes me, as an honest man, that if we wish to get the opinion of the people, fairly, and honestly, and legally, on the matter of town or district representation, it will be upon this proposition. If there be any evil in a large House of Representatives, the people will have seen the evil, and can then set themselves to work to remedy it. They will have witnessed the action of the new Constitution with a numerous House of Representatives, and whatever of evil there is in the system, will by that time, have been discovered; and, if it is thought best, your district system can then be tried. I trust, however, that at this late hour, after the repeated decisions of the Convention which have been had upon this matter, that gentlemen will not change their votes, to vote in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, but that they will adopt the system proposed by the gentleman from Natick. I do not know whether the people will accept it or not; but I earnestly hope, if any such plan is to be tried, that that may be the plan. At all events, that is the plan which shall have my support.

Mr. GARDNER, of Seekonk. On an early day of the session, I submitted a proposition in regard to the basis of representation, identical, in some respects, to the one which has been adopted; and I flatter myself, Mr. President, that had the Convention adopted my proposition, it would have been more acceptable to the people of the Commonwealth than that which we have now embodied in the Constitution. Nevertheless, I very cordially yielded my support to the proposition of the gentleman from Lowell, (Mr. Butler,) in the Convention, and I shall support it elsewhere. I am not of opinion, Sir, that the people of the Commonwealth are yet prepared for the district system; notwithstanding, I think the day will soon come when that system will be adopted. And, farther, although I regard the plan we have adopted, as being undoubtedly imperfect, and believe that it would be impossible for the Convention to adopt a system which would not involve imperfections in it, still I shall support the plan we have now decided upon; at the same time, I must say that I think it nothing more than right and fair, that the people of the Commonwealth should have an alternate system presented to them.

There are many difficulties which surround this question. It will be attended with difficulties, if presented to the people. I can see no valid reason why the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton should not be submitted to the people, and their action had thereon. Therefore, I shall cordially give my support to the proposition presented by the learned gentleman from Taunton, which town, I have the honor, in part, to represent. But should that proposition fail to command a majority of the votes of this Convention, I shall then as cordially give my support to the proposition offered by the gentleman from Natick, although I do not see that question precisely in the same light as some others do. Nevertheless, I hope the Convention will not continue the debate upon this subject any longer, but that the question will be taken, in order that the Convention may be brought to a close the present week. I hope, also, that the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton will be adopted.

Mr. BANKS, of Waltham. I desire to say but a word or two upon this question. I have favored, as well as I was able, the system of representation adopted by this Convention, and have but little doubt that the proposition will be adopted by the people. I stand upon this ground—that, upon the theory of our government, the towns have an absolute right of representation, and that that right is, in some degree, coextensive with their existence, as part of the government, and necessary to the maintenance of their full powers. Therefore, I have no hesitation whatever, in regard to the plan accepted by the Convention, nor do I suppose that, by pursuing the course indicated by the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) or that of the gentleman from Natick, (Mr. Wilson,) we depart from it. But the principle of town representation may be abandoned, by the people of the Commonwealth. I think, in time, it will be abandoned, for we are constantly departing from our old customs, and adopting new. What we want to ascertain at the present time is, what is the will of the people in regard to this question of representation; not only what is politic and just, and right, but what is the will of the people; for, after all, that is the power which controls us. There is no rampart in any Constitution which we can form, that will stand against that power. We cannot protect ourselves by any provision in this instrument. Therefore, at the same time that I stand upon the proposition of the Convention, I am willing to submit a proposition to the people, in alternate terms, that they may judge which of the two plans they prefer. But I confess I have a preference in regard to the manner of this submission. I would gladly assent to the proposition the gentleman from Taunton introduced, and which is now before the Convention, but that I see in the resolve, what seems to me, two defects; first, as to the manner of submission; and second, as to the time of submission; either of which, I judge, would preclude a fair consideration and determination of the question.

Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Taunton to this fact, that the plan of representation which he proposes is indefinite in its character, is ideal, and not in a distinct form; therefore, when the question of district representation is placed before the people, every man prefigures for himself such a representation as he would prefer, and every town gives its vote for just such an ideal system as that town might prefer. So far, it is very well. But we do not present the question of town representation in the same way. If the gentleman from Taunton would present the question of the district system in this form, "will you agree to a district system for a House of Representatives of not less than two hundred and sixty, and not more than three hundred and twenty members, or will you agree to a system of town representation," that would be an equal presentation of the two systems, and it would be understood. But that is not the question. The question of the district system is indefinite, and it may assume any form of beauty in which interest or imagination may clothe it. But the question as to town representation, presented at the same time, if the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton be adopted, is not thus indefinite. In every part, its proportions and character are rigidly and unalterably defined. The question is, shall the system of representation by towns stand, "in the form accepted by this Convention?" It seems to me that it does not present the two questions upon the same ground. Nor can they be determined by the people at the same time, with any degree of consideration and justice. I object, therefore, to the manner of presentation. Either the questions should be distinct and definite, and the towns should know with what other towns they are to act and vote, or else the system of town representation should stand separate and independent of its embarrassing details. So far I object to the manner of presentation.

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. — BANKS — WILSON — SCHOULER — HASKELL.

[July 29th.

Then, in regard to the question of time. The time appointed for the submission of this proposition is unfortunate. It goes out to the people with a system of representation to which we have agreed—whether well or ill, gentlemen have different opinions. The question of the district system goes out at the same time, upon which there is the same division of opinion. There are three questions to be presented. First, shall the existing system stand? second, will you agree to the system of representation by towns, as adopted by this Convention? or shall the district system be established?

Now, as has been said, the friends of the district system will vote against the representation of towns, as accepted by this Convention, and the friends of representation of towns, as accepted by this Convention, will vote against the district system. So far, it is well, but both of those interests will be likely to form a rampart to secure themselves against the success of the objectionable plan, by voting against any change whatever. Such will be a probable result, at least. It seems to me if these two difficulties could be obviated by the gentleman from Taunton, his proposition should receive a general concurrence on the part of the Convention.

As to the proposition of the gentleman from Natick, I have not a clear conception, but my idea is this: it postpones the presentation of the question to the people until the year 1856. So far, then, as my objection to the time of presentation is concerned, that is removed. In the second place, it instructs the legislature of that year, peremptorily, to divide the Commonwealth into representative districts, and then to submit these defined and allotted districts to the people. This, I think, is right. If the people of the town I represent are called upon to vote upon the district system, the first question they will ask, is, where they are to be placed, and in what district? No answer can be given, under the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton. But under the other proposition, which proposes that the districts shall be defined by the legislature, every voter will have a perfect knowledge, so that he can determine whether he prefers the proposed system, or that which will exist, if the Constitution shall be ratified by the people. These are my grounds of objection to the plan of the gentleman from Taunton. I may have erred, somewhat, in my judgment of the proposition, but it seems to me the reasons I have given are applicable.

Mr. WILSON, of Natick. I desire to say but a single word in relation to this matter, and I will detain the Convention but a few minutes. I wish to say a word in relation to the motive which prompted me to bring this question before the Convention. I wished to do it for the purpose of giving the friends of the district system a fair opportunity, in this State, to present that question to the people. We have assented to a different system. It is in the power of the legislature, if this Constitution shall be adopted, any time between the adoption of the Constitution and the year 1873, by a two-thirds vote in the House and a majority in the Senate, approved by two successive legislatures, to submit the question to the people, whether they will have the district system or not. But, Sir, does any man believe that a House of Representatives, constituted as it will be by this Constitution, will ever submit a single proposition of that kind to the people by a two-thirds vote? Does my friend from Boston, (Mr. Schouler,) dream that the time will ever come, when a two-thirds vote of two successive legislatures, can be obtained to submit that proposition? I do not. Now, the proposition is this; it compels the legislature of 1855, to submit that question to the people, and it compels them to make the details plain. Now, my friend from Boston objects to it on the ground that they will not make fair districts. Does not he know that the Senate is based upon population, and expresses the popular will, and that no vote can be got through that branch of the legislature unless it is fair?

Mr. SCHOULER. The gentlemen who undertake to answer the views which I presented, do not seem to understand them. I say this, that the legislature presents a confused question to the people. For instance, you may take and put together a number of towns, and perhaps the Whig party will say that this will be a Democratic district if I vote for it; the Free Soil party will say it will be a Whig district; and with all those questions coming in, you never can get the people to say fairly what they want, whether they want a district system or not.

Mr. WILSON. I say to my friend from Boston, that this is a difficulty inherent in the district system, and it is a fair and legitimate question for the people to consider. I say, there is not a man on the floor of this Convention who dreams that any two successive legislatures, upon the basis which we propose to place it, will, by a two-thirds vote, ever put out a simple proposition for a district system. What do I propose in this amendment? It is that the legislature of 1855 shall be compelled, by a simple majority of the House of Representatives—nothing more—and a majority of the Senate, based as it is upon the population of the State, to make up a district system—and they will be compelled to make it a fair system—and submit it to the people.

The gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Gardner,) upon my left, referred to some remarks made by me, and wished to know if I had not confidence in the people? I say I have; and one reason why I have confidence in the people of Massachusetts is, because the people of Massachusetts do not agree with him, nor with his opinion. The gentleman from Boston refers to the intelligence of the people of the Commonwealth, out of Natick. Sir, I tell him that no man in this Commonwealth is verdant enough, unless it be the chairman of the Whig Ward and County Committee in the city of Boston, to suppose that the legislature of Massachusetts will ever agree to put out a proposition for an amendment of the Constitution, without going into details. Now, I submit that there is nothing in this proposition which is not fair, liberal, and honest; and which, if adopted, will give the friends of the district system all they ever expect to gain, or all they can ever ask, and that is a fair opportunity to obtain the public sentiment of the State. With that view I have made it.

I think I shall not present it to have a vote taken upon it, until a vote has been taken upon the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton; and if that be voted down, I shall move a reconsideration, for the purpose of putting this amendment into it.

Mr. HASKELL, of Ipswich. I shall trouble the Convention but for a moment, upon the remarks of the gentleman from Natick, that this proposition is a very fair one to the friends of the district system. I do not view it in any such light; and I ask the attention of the Convention while I go on to consider it upon the very ground upon which the gentleman from Natick has stated it. He proposes that the Convention shall adopt, as a part of the Constitution, a provision which requires that the legislature in 1855, and every tenth year thereafter, shall submit to the people a proposition whether they will have a district system, they having first adopted the system proposed by this Convention. He says, it is a fair proposition to require of the legislature a division of the Commonwealth into districts; a legislature, two-thirds of which, the gentleman himself says, two or three times over, we could never get to agree. Is it fair to the friends of the district system, to put them into the hands of a legislature prejudged against the system? Are they to frame a system against their will and choice? Yet this is what the gentleman from Natick claims to be a fair opportunity for the friends of the district system to get the system based upon equal population.

But that is not the only objection to it. There is a great deal that underlies all this, more than I can have time to express to the Convention in the short time allotted to me. He says the time is fair. Is it so? When the whole matter is considered by the people of the Commonwealth, and they are called upon to vote upon the Constitution, is not that the proper time, the fair time, to submit both propositions? I claim that it is, and that it is the fairest time. But, gentlemen, why does he put it off until 1855? Because that is valuation year, and then every small town will be represented here. This apportionment of the State into representative districts is to be done valuation year, when every small town, however small, has a voice equal to a town of four thousand inhabitants. Then is the time when the legislature, by a constitutional enactment, and against their will, are to prepare a district system, and submit it to the people. Will the Convention for one moment believe that the legislature will not be actuated by the same considerations which actuate men in other conditions of life? Will they not seek to avoid a fair expression of opinion upon the part of the people in framing that system? They may frame it very honestly upon its face, but whether one party or the other is in power at the time, they will be very likely to frame it with some reference to the interest of party.

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—HASKELL—WILSON—HATHAWAY.

[July 29th.]

Sir, there are gentlemen here who, very differently from what I expected, have come forward as the peculiar friends of the district system. We have not asked it of them. We do not thank them for their favors. It is very cool indeed for gentlemen who have opposed the district system during the whole session, now to come over and pretend to be its friends, and offer to give the people an opportunity to adopt it in two or three years. Yet they put it in such a shape that they think the people will be sure to vote against it. The gentleman from Natick knows the people would reject such a system, and yet he asks the friends of a district system to come forward and vote to require the legislature to submit a district system which they know will be rejected. The gentleman asks us to father the bastard—if I may be allowed the expression—of his own begetting. But, Sir, I do not believe that a single person in the Commonwealth will be gulled into the belief that in voting for such a proposition as the gentleman from Natick proposes, they are voting for a district system.

If a district system is to be submitted to the people, I want it to be submitted next November, or whenever the Constitution is to be submitted to the people. Then is the proper time for the submission of an alternative proposition, and I am willing and anxious to support a proposition for submitting a fair alternative to the people at that time.

Now, Sir, why is it that gentlemen propose to submit such a proposition in the course of two or three years? We have not asked it of them. I do not believe there is a man in favor of a district system who would vote for such a proposition. The gentleman from Natick stated a significant fact in connection with this matter. He fears that with all the beneficial reforms, some of which I should like to see carried into effect, the people will not adopt the Constitution, and this is thrown in for the purpose of obtaining votes in its favor. Sir, I do not believe the votes of the people are to be obtained by any such manoeuvring.

Mr. WILSON, of Natick, (interrupting). I hope the gentleman from Ipswich, (Mr. Haskell,) does not mean to say that I expressed the idea or the sentiment that there was any danger of defeating the whole doings of this Convention. I intimated no such thing. I never entertained a doubt that the labors of the Convention would be accepted by the people.

Mr. HASKELL. The gentleman said that with this proposition incorporated into the Constitution, they could carry the State. And suppose his proposition is not incorporated into the Constitution; what is the inference? Why, that he apprehended they could not carry the State. That is the only fair inference.

Now, Sir, I ask, what advantage can there be in the proposition proposed by the gentleman from Natick? I submit that it is granting no more than we have already provided for. We have already provided a means by which the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton may be submitted to the people, perhaps in less time than the gentleman from Natick proposes to have his plan submitted. We have given the legislature the power to submit amendments to the Constitution at any time to the people, and they may submit the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton—which is a general district system. They may submit that proposition at the very next session, if they choose, and thus we should get the sense of the people upon that system quicker than we should upon the proposition the gentleman from Natick proposes. The gentleman from Natick knows very well that his proposition would not get the votes of the friends of the district system, and if it is submitted to and rejected by the people, he knows that it will be easier to defeat a clean proposition, like that offered by the gentleman from Taunton, afterwards.

But there is another thing to which the gentleman for Wilbraham, (Mr. Hallett,) alluded. He talked of the departure from the principle of town and corporate rights. Why, Sir, if there ever was such a principle, you have given it up long ago. If there ever was such a principle, you departed from it when you provided that those sixty-four towns, containing less than one thousand inhabitants, should be deprived of an annual representative. How can the principle of corporate rights be maintained while those sixty-four towns are deprived of their rights according to that principle? Sir, I hope the friends of the district system will not accept the boon presented at the hands of their enemies, and presented for the purpose of obtaining their support to this Constitution. As far as I am concerned, I have not committed myself at all in relation to that subject. For the last ten days I have stood non-committal as to the matter of my final support to this Constitution. I have determined that I would keep myself aloof from all compromises, and wait the progress of events. I should be glad to see the Constitution perfected in a manner that would commend it to my judgment, and which would command my support. But I must confess that the proposition proffered by the gentleman from Natick, does not, by any manner of means, make up for the unjust system of representation which the Convention have adopted.

Mr. HATHAWAY, of Freetown. I have endeavored a number of times to get the floor, for the purpose of saying something upon this subject. I did not intend, however, when this proposition was introduced, to have said a single word in relation to it, and I should not have felt called on to do so now, but for the strangeness of the course which it seems to me has been pursued. But, I cannot allow to pass unnoticed some of the arguments which have been presented here, and I regret that I shall not have time in the fifteen minutes allowed me, to answer half the objections which have been raised against the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, as they should be answered. The honorable President of this Convention, (Mr. Banks,) objects to the time and manner of its being presented, and speaks of the corporate rights of towns. Let me ask that gentleman whether that whole matter has not been given up by those who claim not only to be the friends, but the exclusive friends of the towns? Is not the whole proposition, the whole principle in the matter given up? Have not they yielded it? What has become of the vested rights of the towns of which the gentleman for Wilbraham has talked so much? Where are the vested rights of your cities? You have provided that one-third the population of the whole Commonwealth shall be placed in districts. I repeat it, Sir, where are the vested rights of your large towns and cities? If these rights the gentleman speaks of are vested rights, what is to become of the city of Boston and her rights? But is this doctrine of vested rights true? Sir, just analyze this proposition for a moment. See how your towns are formed. Where do they get their charters from, but from a mere act of the legislature? The legislature time and again has cut and carved the towns of the Commonwealth ever since those towns have had an existence. Aye, Sir, and the gentleman from Taunton told us the other day how the legislature at one time took it into their heads, in their wisdom, to abolish a town altogether. Where were the vested rights of that town then? Sir, there is nothing in this doctrine, as it seems to me.

The honorable President of the Convention speaks of the beautiful form and consistency of the proposition adopted by the Convention in reference to this matter. Now I want to know wherein it consists? Is it because it provides for districting one-third the population of the Commonwealth? Surely, the gentleman would not say, take the proposition and go it in the dark so far as that one-third of the population is concerned, for the sake of accommodating the small towns. Will he contend that the small towns have vested rights and that the large ones have not?

But, Sir, this argument of vested rights was well answered by my friend over the way from Cambridge, (Mr. Sargent). Where are the vested rights of the counties? Your counties have had a corporate existence ever since 1780, and long before that, they elected their magistrates, yet how are their vested rights regarded? They are not respected in the election of senators. You can trace these vested rights of the counties—if there are such vested rights of corporations—back almost to the settlement of the country. Where are your beautiful forms which you are to present to your constituency and to the country in this respect? Where is that beauty of form which the honorable President argued you were going to present to the people of the Commonwealth for them to pass upon? I cannot find it. Let me say to the honorable President that long, long before one-half the towns of the Commonwealth were in existence, the counties of the Commonwealth were known and were incorporated, and hence, when you come to talk about vested rights, you must look to the vested rights of the counties as well as to those of the towns.

Sir, this whole matter is founded upon a false theory. The premises are not sound, and hence the reasoning in relation to the whole matter, however ingenious it may be, falls to the ground.

But I must hasten on with my argument. The majority of the Convention not only give up the principle of corporate rights as far as the cities are concerned, but they even provide that the small towns may be districted. Let me say, as I said before, the principle of corporate representation is gone, and that of districting is plainly acknowledged. Now, Sir, I desire to give the gentleman from Plymouth, (Mr. Davis,) and the gentleman from Montague, (Mr. Alvord,) a little attention as I pass along. I confess it comes a little ungraciously from that quarter to throw back upon us the responsibility of adopting the system you have adopted in reference to senatorial districts. Sir, I thought there was something strange about that matter when it was before us. I recollect very well the position I assumed, and the position occupied by the gentleman from Plymouth, and I will venture to say the same position was occupied by the gentleman for Montague, though I cannot speak with certainty. But now they turn round and throw upon us the responsibility of what they themselves have done.

Friday,] HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, &c.—HATHAWAY—DAVIS—FAY—GRISWOLD—BROWN—BRIGGS. [July 29th.

The gentlemen who went in favor of districting your Commonwealth and having your representation based upon population, now turn around and throw it in our faces, and say: "You have based your Senate upon population, and now comes the town system." Sir, I was opposed to that. The gentleman from Salem, the other day, said to them: "Go back to your basis of legal voters—you are welcome to it, and we will go with you." I was opposed to having the Senate based upon population, and now they turn around and throw it in my face, and say: "You have got a great deal more than you deserved; the county of Suffolk has got a deal more when based upon population, than she would have if the basis was fixed upon legal voters." This is the very ground that they put it on. The gentleman from Plymouth went with them, and I thought then that there was something singular and strange about it, for I laid my eye upon Plymouth, although I do not live in that county, for she was part and parcel of the Old Colony. I confess I had some sympathy for her; and the gentleman said that he had been rebuked by his constituents. Sir, I think he deserved rebuke; for, after all, sift it and turn it as you please, what does it amount to but a bargain? The gentleman says that it was expressly understood—I take his own language—it was expressly understood that he should go in favor of municipal corporations, and that representation in the House should be by towns, and that is the reason why he went for it. That explains the reason why we who were governed by principle rather than by expediency, were deserted. Now, I say, it is unjust, after gentlemen have told us what controlled their minds in the matter, to turn around and say to us, now: "Although you were opposed to this system of representation, based upon population, you must take it, because those persons who were friends of town representation made an express understanding with us that if the representation in the Senate should be based upon population, we should go for representation based upon municipalities in the House of Representatives." I say it is unjust.

Mr. DAVIS, of Plymouth. I rise, Mr. President, to correct a misapprehension upon the part of the gentleman with regard to the motives by which many persons were governed in giving their votes upon this matter. They voted for the basis of the Senate, founded upon population, because they were led to suppose that the basis of the House would be founded upon legal voters.

Mr. HATHAWAY. I understood the gentleman expressly to say, that he voted for the basis of representation founded upon population—I am speaking only of what he said, for I do not know what other gentlemen said—that he voted for this basis of representation in the Senate, with the express understanding that town representation was to be preserved. That was his language, for I took it down at the time. Has the gentleman fulfilled his agreement with the people? Where are your cities and great towns? Are they not districted? Has his agreement been carried out? It seems to me that he has "kept the word of promise to the ear, but broke it to the hope."

[Here the hammer fell.]

On motion by Mr. FAY, of Southborough, the Special Assignment was then laid on the table.

Leave of Absence.

Mr. FAY, of Southborough, from the Committee on Leave of Absence, submitted a report, recommending that leave of absence be granted to the following members, for the remainder of the session:—

Messrs. Marble, of Charlton; Hoyt, of Deerfield; Knowlton, of Holden; Warner, of Stockbridge; Marcy, of Greenwich; Atwood, of Eastham; Cady, of Monson; Tilton, of Chilmark; Allen, of Brimfield; Swain, of Nantucket; Easton, of Nantucket; Turner, of South Hadley; and Haggood, of Athol.

The Report having been read, the question was stated on its acceptance.

Mr. GRISWOLD, for Erving. Mr. President: There are a great many names there. I do not know but that there may be a sufficient reason for adopting the Report; but really, unless it is on account of sickness, it seems to me that this leave ought not to be granted at this late period of the session.

Mr. FAY. I will state that five on the list are either sick themselves or have sickness in their families, which renders it necessary that they should be absent; and with regard to some of the others, their business is very pressing, so that it would be a great hardship to refuse them. The Committee have examined the cases thoroughly; and, although they were desirous not to excuse any one, they have thought it proper to submit this Report, and recommend its adoption.

The question being taken, the Report was accepted.

On motion by Mr. HATHAWAY, the Convention then adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at three o'clock, P. M.

Termination of Debate.

On motion by Mr. BROWN, of Medway, it was ordered, that debate on the resolve on the mode of submitting the question of representation to the people, cease at four o'clock this afternoon, and that the question be then taken.

Representation.

On motion by Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell, the Convention proceeded to consider the Orders of the Day, the special assignment being the resolve on the mode of submitting the question of representation to the people; and the question was stated upon ordering the resolve to a second reading.

Mr. BRIGGS, of Pittsfield. I suppose, Mr. President, that both propositions are virtually before the Convention. That of the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton.) and that of the gentleman from Natick, (Mr. Wilson). I shall vote in favor of the proposition of the gentleman Taunton; and I shall vote for it for the reasons which he gave, and which need not be repeated in detail. Although there have been many speeches in opposition to it, with all respect to gentlemen who have debated the question, I must be permitted to say that I do not think they have met and answered his arguments. His proposition is to submit to the people in the first place, the question whether they will retain or abolish the twelfth article of amendments to the present Constitution. If they abolish that, will they have a system of representation on the plan which has been adopted by this Convention, called the town system, or will they have a district system to be apportioned and marked out by a future Senate, basing the representation of the supposed districts upon the legal voters of the Commonwealth? Now, to my mind, nothing is more clear, nothing is more plain, nothing is more equal and just, than that proposition. Gentlemen who have spoken upon this subject, admit that it is so, upon the face of it; but they say that you cannot carry out a system of district representation that the people will accept. Sir, if the people say that they will have a district system of representation, and direct their Senate to mark out the districts upon the map of the State, it must be done, and it will be done by that Senate, in the most perfect and fair manner that it can be done, because there will be no other motive than a just one to govern them. I know that the gentleman for Wilbraham held up the terrors of gerrymandering; but I think that gentleman had better not talk about gerrymandering, for he formerly belonged to that party who more than forty years ago sealed their political death warrant for years, by that strange and monstrous measure by which the old republican party divided the State for the choice of Senators. Sir, in all future time the sword of Damocles will hang over their heads, glittering with alarm and terror to any political legislature that shall dare to imitate that bad example. This is the question then for the people of Massachusetts to decide: Will you have a system of district representation, based upon legal voters, and that system to be marked out by your representatives? That is the question, nothing more nor less; and why shall we not submit this question? The gentleman from Lowell says—and he always speaks what he means, and I respect him for it—he says that you must not submit this question to the people, because it is so delusive; it has an exterior of fairness and justice which he says cannot be carried out, and having such an appearance of fairness and justice, he is afraid that the people will be deluded into its adoption. Sir, mark that. I hope the people will hear that. It is not then to be submitted to the people, because they may be deluded by it. Sir, if there is, anything fair, honest, and reasonable, in any proposition, it seems to me that this proposition bears those marks. How is it with the proposition of my friend from Natick? He showed it to me yesterday; and I cast my eyes over it hastily, and said that I did not see any objection in it, except as to the time when it should go into operation. But, during the debate this morning, while several of those with whom I generally act, expressed their opposition to it, my mind was balancing. Indeed, I had about made up my mind, if the question was put, to vote for it, until I heard the gentleman from Lowell, and I thank him for his speech. I always listen to that gentleman with pleasure, for if I do not agree with him, he speaks in a bold and fearless manner that commands my attention. He calls things by their proper names—he plants himself upon his proposition, and defies his enemies; and that is the way I like to hear a question

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—BRIGGS—UPTON.

[July 29th.]

argued. He is an adversary who does not lie in ambush, though he is sometimes rather rough. He acts openly. He uses the Damascus blade, the cleaver, or the war-club, as best suits his purpose. He told us, in the first place, that all the strength which God had given him should be devoted to the preservation of town representation. He told us, also, that he should vote for the proposition of my friend from Natick; and why? Because he knew that any proposition which might be marked out on the map by a future legislature, would not be accepted by the people. And how does he know that? I will tell you how he knows it. Before the legislature are required to make a law to carry out this provision, the system of representation which the majority of this Convention—chosen by a minority of the people—have adopted, is to go into operation; that system of town representation which chooses a majority of the House of Representatives by a minority of the people, is to prevail in this House in 1855, when the district system is to be marked out upon the map of the State. Now, Sir, look at the small towns upon this floor, and look at the votes upon this floor for the respective systems of town and district representation. Sir, I respect the gentlemen from these small towns; they have stood up here like brave men, and they have defended their little citadels to the death. Now, if you have a House thus constituted—four hundred and thirty-five strong—to lay out districts upon the map of Massachusetts, to see whether a majority of the people would accept it, do you believe that after standing up here and defending themselves so manfully, they would then lay their heads upon the political block, and suffer their cherished town representation to be blotted out forever? No, Sir! Men do not gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles; and a House of Representatives based upon town representation, will never agree to a proposition and submit it to the people, that they believe the people will accept, to disfranchise themselves. Can you expect it of them as men?

But, is said that the Senate is based upon population. So it is. But can the Senate district the State? Suppose the Senate send a district system into the House of Representatives—such a one as would be acceptable to the people—do you think that in a body composed of representatives of the town corporations, a majority would be found who would accept of a plan that would take their seats from under them, and deprive them of their representation? No, Sir! Let me say a word here to my friends from the small towns, who appear from indications now quite manifest, to be willing to vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Natick. Where is my friend from Wilmington, who so valiantly stood up here and defended the small towns? I would like to ask him, and I wish to ask the other gentlemen from the small towns, have you not heard it said in some quarters—has it not been whispered in your ears, that you may vote for this proposition, because you will have the staff in your own hands when the State comes to be districted? And that whilst you vote for it you are perfectly safe.

But, what reason is there why you will not vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton? Is it not because you believe, with the gentleman from Lowell, that it is so plausible and delusive that the people may be deluded into accepting it? But, I put it to your candor, when you change your votes and go for the district proposition, is it not upon the ground that you are perfectly safe in your towns? And, why are you safe? Because, upon the declaration of the gentleman from Lowell, no system of district representation will be submitted to the people but what they will reject. But, is that dealing fairly with the people? "Is this thy kindness to thy friend?" Do you propose to compromise matters with town representation in that way, by sending out to the people a proposition which you believe, from the bottom of your hearts, never will be accepted by them, and you vote for it only because you believe that they will not acceptit—or in the language of the gentleman from Lowell, a proposition which you know they will not accept—while you keep back a proposition which you fear they would accept, but which, if they did, would deprive your town of its representation? The gentleman from Erving, (Mr. Griswold,) says he shall vote for this proposition, because he has such confidence in the people, that he does not believe they will accept it. I believe, Mr. President, that I have not mistated or misrepresented anything or anybody; I certainly would not do it; and therefore having stated my views upon this question, as they have presented themselves to my mind, and having neither voice nor strength to go into the subject more elaborately, I leave this question to the fair and candid consideration of the Convention.

Mr. UPTON, of Boston. I do not propose to go into an extended discussion upon this question; but there are one or two views in relation to it, which I think have not been submitted. The question before this body is, will this Convention send out an alternative proposition to the people of this Commonwealth? I do not propose to go into a discussion as to who constitutes the people; but I stand upon the ground that I am ready to vote for any proposition in this Convention, which shall put two questions to the people of this Commonwealth, in order to ascertain precisely what their views are upon the question of representation. I am in favor of one of two propositions. I am in favor, if the proposition is to go to the people, of having both propositions go together. If this Convention see fit to send them to the people at this time, very well; or if they see fit to delay sending any proposition until 1855, I say very well—let the representation stand upon its present basis until 1855, and then send out to the people of this Commonwealth two alternative propositions: "Gentlemen, people of the Commonwealth, do you prefer a district system of not less than two hundred and forty members for your House of Representatives, and not to exceed three hundred and fifty members, or do you prefer a system of town representation upon that same basis of numbers?" I am ready to submit these questions to the people, because I believe that the proposition which you are about to submit, will take away from the people, and prevent their rightful expression of opinion upon the subject.

Now, Sir, there is another form in which I should like to have it sent out. It would suit me a little better, if the gentleman from Taunton would amend his motion, by striking out the word "Senate" in the last paragraph, and substituting the word "Legislature," so that it would read as follows:—

The Legislature, at its first session after the ratification of this amendment, and at its first session after each decennial census, shall divide each County into such Representative Districts, composed of contiguous territory, as they may deem expedient, so that the basis of each Representative shall be the same number of legal voters, as nearly as possible, without the division of towns or the wards of cities: provided, that no District shall be so large as to entitle it to more than three Representatives; and provided that Nantucket and Dukes County, shall each form one District, and be entitled to at least one Representative.

If the amendment of the gentleman from Taunton, is adopted by the people, the small towns in the Commonwealth will have the power, in 1854, to present the district question to the people, and they may present it in any form they please. I repeat, take the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, with the modification which I have suggested, and, as all the towns will be represented in the legislature, let the people take the question upon the two propositions; first, the present basis, as proposed by your Convention; and, second, the district basis, to be framed by the legislature, upon the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton. I am ready to meet the question upon this principle. I say that either of these two propositions would be a fair proposition to send to the people. I do not propose to argue this subject. I merely desire to make a statement, in order that it may go upon record, as the view of one of the minority in this Convention, of an individual who desires the prosperity of the good old Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and that it shall not be, hereafter, racked by internal dissensions upon this question of the basis of representation. I can tell those gentlemen who represent the small towns upon this floor, that however they may talk about it, if, as has been foreshadowed by certain members of this House, the great Democratic party is to be in the ascendant, then I tell them, that their only security is, to have the party to which I belong, and which is now in the minority in this Convention, represented in the various cities and towns in this Commonwealth, by a majority in the legislature. Let me tell gentlemen who represent the small towns upon this floor, that once let rampant democracy be triumphant in Boston and the great cities, and the basis of representation would not stand one hour, which you now submit to the people.

There is another question which has been alluded to, in the course of this discussion, and that is, the question of vested rights. In relation to that matter, I have done what lies in my power, to preserve town representation, as far as, under existing circumstances, it could be preserved in this Commonwealth. The gentleman from Wilbraham proposes the question of "vested rights," and how stands that question in this Convention? We have tried, over and over again, to put it into your Constitution, that this question of vested rights, so far as the towns were concerned, should remain intact—that is, that these towns should not be cut up. How has this question been met by the majority of this Convention? You have denied that right. You have said that it shall not go into your fundamental law. Is this the way you respect vested rights, to divide eighty-five towns in this Commonwealth, so as to increase their representation by eighty-five, upon this floor? And then you talk about vested rights! Sir, it is but a mockery and a dream. There is one question in relation to vested rights, that I should like to ask the gentleman for Wilbraham: If all the people of the Commonwealth should gather, en masse, and they should say how their representation should be based, what principle would there be in the vested right of town corporations? If I understood the proposition which the gentleman for Wilbraham made, to amend the Constitution in regard to future Conventions, the whole theory of vested rights, so far as the towns are concerned, was completely brushed away. There is no such thing as vested rights now, except in theory. The gentleman put forth, in that proposition, that the people of this Commonwealth—not the town corporations, but the people—had the right not only to change their Constitution, but to change the whole basis of representation. Now I desire, and should be most happy to give my vote for any proposition which would submit to the people the questions which I have named, which I hold to be the only true questions: Will the people of this Commonwealth sustain the present basis of representation—or any basis, I care not what it is—any basis of representation which the legislature may submit to them, fixing the limit of the House of Representatives? Be it borne in mind, this is a pretty important question. When the honorable President addressed the Convention this morning, he said that it was not a fair question to submit to the people, and I agree with him, to submit to the people the question, whether they will have a House of Representatives of four hundred and forty members, as it now is, or a House of Representatives to be districted by the legislature in 1856—of two hundred and sixty-one members. I want the people to pass upon the proposition in a different form, and I am ready to submit the question to them, stating the maximum as well as the minimum of the number of members: “How shall those representatives be chosen? Shall they be chosen by districts, or shall they be chosen by towns, as they are now chosen?” I say that is the fair question to submit to the people, and it presents the whole question. I should say, in this connection, in regard to the district system, as I have once before remarked, that the minority here represent the majority of the people of the Commonwealth upon this subject. I hope the gentleman from Taunton will modify his motion as I have suggested. I am perfectly ready, and prefer, if the people adopt the alternative proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, to let this question go to the legislature instead of the Senate. I stand here upon this floor as a friend, so far as I can be, to the towns, and I am ready, so far as the basis is concerned, that the present town corporations, represented in the House, should have a full voice in saying precisely how the question of districting should be carried out.

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. — UPTON — GRISWOLD.

[July 29th.

Mr. GRISWOLD, for Erving. I believe that my position upon the subject of representation is pretty well understood by this body; but a new proposition has now been laid before them, and I am not a little surprised at the manner in which this proposition has been assailed from certain quarters. It is proposed, by my friend from Natick, as I understand it, after the present Constitution which we propose to submit to the people has gone into effect, and its practical operations have been observed and experienced; it is proposed by the advocates of the system of the gentleman from Natick, then to submit to the people of the Commonwealth the question, whether they prefer, to the system which we propose to put forth, and which they will have had an opportunity to examine, a district system; not, Sir, in the abstract; not in every imaginary shape in which it may be conjured up by this man, and by that man; but in detail, precisely as it is to go into operation, so that every voter in this Commonwealth may know where it will cut, and what the districts will be.

Now, Sir, I think I should not have started this proposition myself; in fact, at first, I had some doubt about it; but as the discussion has progressed, I am free to say, that my doubts one after another have vanished; and why? I apprehend that, if the two propositions could be properly put to the people of this Commonwealth, and be properly understood in their practical operations in detail, a large majority would be in favor of town representation. Well, Sir, we go forth to them with a system of town representation somewhat decimated, but as perfect as we could get it, which we think is substantially correct, and with it we put forth another proposition; and the people of the Commonwealth will have an opportunity, if they adopt this system, to see its operation. It is said that the House will be too large—they can try it. It is said to be unequal in its representation of different portions of the Commonwealth—they will have an opportunity to test that matter. In short, they will have an opportunity, if this system which we put forth is adopted, to see how they like it, and how it operates. Now, I say, as a friend of town representation, that after that system has been put into operation, and has been tested by the people of the Commonwealth, if gentlemen will then come forward with a district system carried out into detail so that we can see precisely how it is to operate in every town and city in the Commonwealth, I cannot stand up here and say that I object to putting such a proposition before the people in such a manner as that, and at such a time.

And, if the majority of the people of the Commonwealth—the question thus fairly and properly put—after the first system has been tested by practice, should say that, after all, your system of town representation in unequal, unjust, and wrong; all things considered, it is not in my mouth to find fault with that verdict; yet such is my confidence that no such system as this district system will be adopted by the people of the Commonwealth, that I have no fears whatever in regard to giving it a trial. Why, Sir, take the system proposed by the gentleman from North Brookfield, (Mr. Walker,)—and that was a pretty fair system—or the system proposed by the gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Hale,) who made the Minority Report, and I apprehend that, outside of the cities, you cannot stand for a moment upon either of these plans, because I believe that the towns generally dislike to be united in the mode, and for the purposes which these systems proposed.

But, it is farther said here, that it would be unfair for a legislature elected upon the basis we now provide, to perfect this system of representation, before it is sent out to the people. I cannot see how it can be unfair. In the first place, if it is not perfected before it goes out to the people, and the people should adopt a system which has no definite details, and which details only can be provided by the legislature, it must be obvious to every-body, that the legislature will afterwards have to perfect the system in regard to these details. And, if this must necessarily be done by the legislature, why may it not as well be done before the system is sent out, as after it is sent out? In the one case, the people would know exactly for what they were voting; in the other they would be voting blindfold.

But it is farther contended, that the House of Representatives will be unequally elected, and that they will, on that account, be very likely to send out an unequal system. Without going into that question, admitting even for a moment that it were so—this system must be passed upon by the Senate, elected in equal districts, and may be rejected by that body; or, even if concurred in by them, it may be vetoed by the governor; and you could not get a system through unless it was equal and fair—and therefore I see no objection to it so far as that matter is concerned. There is, therefore, no force in that objection. Again, in the popular branch of the legislature, if the people are not represented according to population, this proposition provides that the system shall be based upon voters equally, so that it is not in the power of the legislature to form unequal districts; so that I see no force whatever in the objection upon that ground. Sir, I will go farther. The Convention will bear me witness that I have not taken up much time upon this question, and although I might now claim the privilege of answering some of the objections which have been raised to the system we have adopted, I will not do so; for I feel that this matter has been agitated to such an extent as to become almost a nausea in the nostrils of the Convention. I look upon this agitation about the inequality of the proposed town system, in the main, as humbug. I believe that the proposition before the Convention is substantially equal in its provisions; and that one part of the Commonwealth is as well represented, all things considered, as another. I do not believe that there has been a disposition on the part of any members of the Convention to give an undue proportion of representation to one part of the Commonwealth at the expense of another.

Entertaining these views, I am willing to vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Natick. I shall be unwilling to vote for that of the gentleman from Taunton, for several reasons, and among the first and foremost of them is the reason that I would not mix up and confuse this question of representation at this time. The question on this head has been elaborately discussed by others. I would not at this time put forth a mere abstract proposition, like this district system, without any details. It would be unfair, and would operate as a kind of drag-net, by which you would confuse and draw together the voters of the State, without being exactly able to discriminate themselves for what they were voting. On the other hand, if the proposition of the gentleman from Natick is given out, such is my confidence in the town system, that I have no fears of the result; and after the town system has gone into effect, and its operations have been seen, then, although a friend of town representation, I am willing that the question of a district system should be submitted to the people. If the people want it, it is not for me to say they shall not have it, although I am an advocate of the town system; and I do not see how gentlemen here who have been advocates of the district system, and who have advocated the Minority Report, the details of which have been perfected, can feel that they are acting with consistency in opposing the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Natick; as all they can now do is to submit the question of a district system to the people, and that we do by incorporating the amendment of the gentleman from Natick (Mr. Wilson) into the Constitution.

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—HUBBARD—DAVIS—FRENCH—MORTON.

[July 29th.]

Mr. HUBBARD, of Boston. I did not intend to trouble the Convention again with any remarks in regard to any matter that might come before us for consideration, nor do I expect to influence the action of any member of this body by any argument which I may address to it. But, Sir, when I hear gentlemen advocate a measure which, in my humble judgment, is neither more nor less in its character and results than a deception—I impute no improper motives either to its author or to those who favor it—I say, when in its operation it has a tendency to mislead and deceive the people, and when those who attempt to oppose this measure are stigmatized as factious and inconsistent, I cannot sit still, without at least defending my own action in regard to this proposition. Sir, it has been said that those members of the Convention who have heretofore been found advocating the district system, are grossly inconsistent in refusing to support the proposition of the gentleman from Natick. Sir, when we see with what a death grasp the members of this body representing small towns have clung to their prerogative rights which they now enjoy, and when it is proposed to us to ask these same towns some two or three years hence, when they are more firmly seated in power than they now are, to lessen that grasp, and to give the people an opportunity of acting upon the district system—what can any reasonable man, who is friendly to the district system, hope for or expect?

We are told that it will be imperative upon the legislature, at a given time, to submit such a system to the people. The proposition, Sir, is an absurdity. To say that a legislature consisting of two bodies so dissimilarly organized and elected, when called upon to exercise their discretion in regard to any particular measure—and to say what is fair and what is unfair, what equal and what unequal—are to be compelled to agree in regard to it, involves an absurdity which never was heard of in all parliamentary history. Suppose that the Senate, of Massachusetts, in 1856, should devise and send down to the House of Representatives a fair system of district representation, what power on earth can compel that House to adopt it, unless they see fit? Or, on the other hand, let a system be originated in the House, and appear just and fair—with gerrymandering, perhaps, in all its features—and be sent to the Senate, where it is deemed unjust and outrageous, what power is there to compel the Senate to agree with the House? Sir, if you put this into your Constitution, you put that into it which it is morally impossible to carry out, with a legislature such as you will have upon the basis now proposed in your amended Constitution.

Sir, there is nothing about this proposition in the nature of a compromise. It does not give the friends of the district system the remotest chance of putting such a system before the people as will enable them to give a fair expression of opinion in favor of the district system. I shall, therefore, oppose this proposition; and, in doing so, I shall regard myself as acting with entire consistency in the vote I now give, when viewed in relation to the votes I have heretofore given when the district system was under consideration.

Mr. WILSON, of Natick. I now offer my amendment.

The amendment was read, as reported in the early part of the day.

Mr. DAVIS, of Worcester. I do not propose to trouble the Convention longer than for a few moments. I am very glad that this proposition has been offered by the gentleman from Natick, because I can vote for it with all my heart, and because I believe it to be a fair proposition to put out before the people in regard to a district system; and, in that way the people will have a fair opportunity of deciding whether they will have a district system or a town system of representation. I shall go for the amendment, and shall oppose the proposition of the gentleman from Taunton, because it does not put the question fairly to the people. I have watched this discussion closely, to see if any gentleman could make out its fairness upon this matter. I cannot conceive it to be a fair proposition; and I have not yet learned from the remarks of any gentleman here that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Natick is not entirely fair.

Another objection that has been alluded to, is that we have no authority to send out such a proposition to the people. If you turn to the third section of the charter by which we are to be governed here, you will find that authority amply and fully laid down:—

"SECT. 3. The persons so elected delegates shall meet in Convention in the State House, in Boston, on the first Wednesday in May, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three; and they shall be the judges of the returns and elections of their own members, and may adjourn from time to time; and one hundred of the persons elected shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business; and they shall proceed, as soon as may be, to organize themselves in Convention, by choosing a president and such other officers as they may deem expedient, and by establishing proper rules of proceeding; and when organized, they may take into consideration the propriety and expediency of revising the present Constitution of government of this Commonwealth, or the propriety and expediency of making any, and if any, what alterations or amendments, in the present Constitution of government of this Commonwealth. And such alterations or amendments, when made and adopted by the said Convention, shall be submitted to the people for their ratification and adoption, in such manner as the Convention shall direct; and if ratified by the people in the manner directed by the said Convention, the Constitution shall be deemed and taken to be altered or amended accordingly; and if not so ratified, the present Constitution shall be and remain the Constitution of government of this Commonwealth."

But that section gives us no authority to put to the people any proposition in the manner proposed by the gentleman from Taunton. As presented by the gentleman from Natick, it is perfectly proper, and, therefore, I shall vote for that amendment.

Mr. FRENCH, of New Bedford. I simply rise to occupy but a single moment in expressing my approbation of the proposition of the gentleman from Natick. I agree, in the main, with what gentlemen have said in its favor. I believe that it is fair, honorable, and equal; and although I went for the system that has been adopted by the Convention, so far, I am perfectly willing that this system should be tried, and if it can be put to the people in the manner pointed out in that amendment, I am perfectly satisfied with it, and hope that the people will adopt it. I only wished to say that I think it is right and just, and that I trust it will be adopted by the Convention.

Mr. MORTON, of Taunton. I have been repeatedly appealed to in regard to this proposition, and am sorry to say that there is no time left me to explain this matter. We have before us two propositions in regard to this matter of representation—one providing that towns shall send members to the House of Representatives in a certain manner, and the other that they shall be sent by districts in a certain other manner. There was, I believe, a majority of eighty in favor of the town system. Those who represent the town system represent 386,000 people, while those who voted for the district system represented 421,000; and although—looking to the unequal representation here—the town system got a majority of votes in the Convention, the real majority of the people, by nearly forty thousand, were in favor of the other system.

Under these circumstances, I was anxious that the people themselves might pass upon the question.

It has been said that this proposition has been presented unfairly, and upon that point I should be glad to be heard for a few moments, because, when I drew it up, I certainly drew it up as fairly as I knew how to do so. I found it necessary to draw it up in general terms, because this Convention have adopted that identical mode for the Senate, and precisely in the same mode in relation to the elections to be made for members of the House of Representatives, by at least one-third of the people of the Commonwealth. The proposition in relation to the Senate and the cities, which you have already adopted, is just as general in its terms, and as much without details as mine; and I would ask, whether that is not the only way in which a matter of this sort can be put into the Constitution? I defy gentlemen to say, reasonably, that my proposition is unfair, or to find a Constitution anywhere in the United States, in which a matter of this sort is otherwise provided for, unless it be temporarily, because your population changes from time to time. I ask, therefore, under these circumstances, whether there is anything unfair in this? If I had drawn out a chapter of a dozen pages, there would have been an attack upon every chapter and every section. If I had my way, I would do just exactly as the President of the Convention, (Mr. Banks,) said he would do—put it to the people directly, to say whether they would have a town or a district system of representation. That was just exactly what I wanted to do, but I was obliged to pay some respect to the system the Convention had adopted. I give them all the advantage which belongs to their position. I took their system, and I may say now, I am willing to exchange, and put it all together. I felt bound to take the system as they adopted it, and then present my system as I thought it ought to be adopted into the Constitution, exactly in conformity with the precedent set me by the gentlemen on the opposite side. And, Mr. President, is this a fair mode of putting the question to the people? It has been said that it is unfair. I do not believe that gentlemen intended to impute any wrongful intention upon my part, but in its tendency, they say it is unfair. I appeal to the whole Convention, if it could be drawn up in a form more fair. Now, we are told—I will not say by a majority of this Convention, but by a voice which is as near the voice of a majority as any one voice in this House—that if this goes out in this form, the people will accept it with a "hurrah." And are we going to say that we will not submit it to the people, because we know they will adopt it with a hurrah? If the people want it, let them have it. Are they to make a Constitution, or are we to make it? I say, we are to submit it to them. And why will they give that "hurrah?" I am sorry that, in so many of our acts, in so large a number of them, we stamp upon their face distrust of the people. Why, Sir, will the people go in favor of this proposition? Gentlemen say, simply because they cannot understand it. Mr. President, the gentleman mightily misunderstands the people, if he thinks they cannot comprehend the whole of it. The gentleman thinks they yield to the control of their imagination and fancy, and build therein some beautiful district system, and when they vote, they vote for that. Sir, the people are a practical people, and they can and will understand it, and know all its operation, so that the supposition that they go for it because they do not understand it, is an impeachment of their capacity.

Friday,]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—MORTON.

[July 29th.

I wish to say a word in relation to this amendment, and I will say only a word. How does it come up? From the friends of the district system? No; it is a foundling, and an illegitimate, to the friends of the district system; and not only that, they also put it out to nurse to its enemies. I never knew before of a case where the friends of the offspring did not have the care of it. And this is to be put out by the legislature constituted by a minority. One-third of the people elect the legislature which is to have charge of this system. I beg gentlemen to look at it. Sir, those people who are adverse to sustaining town representation, would have the power to cut up every town, and city, and ward, in the whole Commonwealth. In my system, they are restrained from dividing towns and wards. But if you have a minority body that wishes to put out a system to be rejected, they have nothing to do but to cut up one town and another, all over the Commonwealth, and put that to the people as their system. We have heard of gerrymandering, and the gentleman for Wilbraham, (Mr. Hallett,) says we have it in this system, if adopted at all. I say you cannot get along without suffering the legislature to make the districts, and all that you can do is, to guard against abuse as well as you can.

I have now only time to ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment of the gentleman from Natick.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The hour of four o'clock having arrived, at which time the Convention had determined to take the vote, the first question recurred upon the adoption of the resolution of Mr. Wilson, as a substitute for the resolution of Mr. Morton, and the roll being called thereon, there were—yeas, 209; nays, 138—as follows:—

YEAS.

Adams, Shubael P.
Allen, James B.
Allen, Joel C.
Allen, Parsons
Alley, John B.
Allis, Josiah
Alvord, D. W.
Austin, George
Baker, Hillel
Ball, George S.
Barrett, Marcus
Bates, Eliakim A.
Bates, Moses, Jr.
Beal, John
Bennett, Zephaniah
Bigelow, Edward B.
Bird, Francis W.
Bishop, Henry W.
Bliss, Gad O.
Boutwell, George S.
Boutwell, Sewell
Breed, Hiram N.
Bronson, Asa
Brown, Adolphus F.
Brown, Alpheus R.
Brown, Artemas
Brown, Hammond
Brown, Hiram C.
Brownell, Frederick
Brownell, Joseph
Buck, Asahel
Burlingame, Anson
Butler, Benjamin F.
Cady, Henry
Caruthers, William
Case, Isaac
Chandler, Amariah
Chapin, Chester W.
Chapin, Daniel E.
Chapin, Henry
Childs, Josiah
Churchill, J. McKean
Clark, Henry
Clark, Ransom
Clark, Salah
Clarke, Alpheus B.
Cleverly, William
Cole, Sumner
Crane, George B.
Cross, Joseph W.
Cushman, Henry W.
Cushman, Thomas
Cutler, Simeon N.
Davis, Charles G.
Davis, Ebenezer
Davis, Isaac
Davis, Robert T.
Day, Gilman
Dean, Silas
Deming, Elijah S.
Denton, Augustus
DeWitt, Alexander
Duncan, Samuel
Dunham, Bradish
Durgin, John M.
Eames, Philip
Earle, John M.
Easland, Peter
Easton, James, 2d
Edwards, Elisha
Edwards, Samuel
Ely, Joseph M.
Fay, Sullivan
Fellows, James K.
Fisk, Lyman
Fiske, Emery
Foster, Aaron

Fowle, Samuel
Freeman, James M.
French, Charles A.
French, Rodney
French, Samuel
Frothingham, R., Jr.
Gale, Luther
Gardner, Johnson
Gates, Elbridge
Gilbert, Washington
Giles, Charles G.
Gooding, Leonard
Goulding, Dalton
Graves, John W.
Green, Jabez
Greene, William B.
Griswold, Josiah W.
Griswold, Whiting
Hadley, Samuel P.
Hallett, B. F.
Hapgood, Lyman W.
Hapgood, Seth
Harmon, Phineas
Haskins, William
Hayden, Isaac
Hazewell, C. C.
Heath, Ezra, 2d
Hewes, James
Hewes, William H.
Hobart, Henry
Hobbs, Edwin
Holder, Nathaniel
Hood, George
Howard, Martin
Howland, Abraham H.
Hoyt, Henry K.
Hunt, Charles E.
Huntington, Charles P.
Huntington, George H.
Hurlbut, Moses C.
Johnson, John
Kendall, Isaac
Keyes, Edward L.
Kimball, Joseph
Kingman, Joseph
Knight, Hiram
Knight, Jefferson
Knight, Joseph
Knowlton, Charles L.
Knowlton, William H.
Knox, Albert
Ladd, Gardner P.
Langdon, Wilber C.
Leland, Alden
Little, Otis
Loomis, E. Justin
Marble, William P.
Marcy, Laban
Mason, Charles
Merritt, Simeon
Monroe, James L.
Moore, James M.
Morton, Elbridge G.
Morton, Marcus, Jr.
Morton, William S.
Nash, Hiram
Nichols, William
Nute, Andrew T.
Ober, Joseph E.
Orne, Benjamin S.
Osgood, Charles
Paine, Benjamin
Paine, Henry
Parris, Jonathan
Partridge, John
Peabody, Nathaniel
Pease, Jeremiah, Jr.

Penniman, John
Perkins, Jesse
Phinney, Silvanus B.
Pool, James M.
Powers, Peter
Putnam, John A.
Rawson, Silas
Richards, Luther
Richardson, Samuel H.
Rockwood, Joseph M.
Rogers, John
Royce, James C.
Sanderson, Amasa
Sanderson, Chester
Sikes, Chester
Simmons, Perez
Simonds, John W.
Smith, Matthew
Sprague, Melzar
Spooner, Samuel W.
Stacy, Eben H.
Stevens, Granville
Stevens, William
Strong, Alfred L.
Sumner, Increase
Sumner, Charles
Swain, Alanson
Taft, Arnold

Thayer, Willard, 2d
Thomas, John W.
Thompson, Charles
Tilton, Abraham
Tilton, Horatio W.
Turner, David
Turner, David P.
Tyler, William
Underwood, Orison
Viles, Joel
Vinton, George A.
Wallace, Frederick, T.
Wallis, Freeland
Walker, Amasa
Ward, Andrew H.
Warner, Samuel, Jr.
Waters, Asa H.
Weston, Gershom B.
Whitney, Daniel S.
Whitney, James S.
Williams, J. B.
Wilson, Henry
Winn, Jonathan B.
Winslow, Levi M.
Wood, Nathaniel
Wood, Otis
Wright, Ezekiel

NAYS.

Adams, Benjamin P.
Aldrich, P. Emory
Andrews, Robert
Aspinwall, William
Atwood, David C.
Ayres, Samuel
Bancroft, Alpheus
Barrows, Joseph
Bartlett, Sidney
Beebe, James M.
Bell, Luther V.
Bennett, William, Jr.
Bigelow, Jacob
Booth, William S.
Bradbury, Ebenezer
Bradford, William J. A.
Brewster, Osymn
Brinley, Francis
Briggs, George N.
Bryant, Patrick
Bullock, Rufus
Choate, Rufus
Coggin, Jacob
Cogswell, Nathaniel
Cole, Lansing J.
Conkey, Ithamar
Cook, Charles E.
Coolidge, Henry F.
Crittenden, Simeon
Crockett, George W.
Crosby, Leander
Davis, John
Davis, Solomon
Dawes, Henry L.
Denison, Hiram S.
Doane, James C.
Dorman, Moses
Eaton, Lilley
Ely, Homer
Eustis, William T.
Farwell, A. G.
Fowler, Samuel P.
French, Charles H.
Gardner, Henry J.
Gilbert, Wanton C.
Giles, Joel
Gould, Robert
Goulding, Jason
Gray, John C.
Hale, Artemas
Hale, Nathan
Hammond, A. B.
Hathaway, Elnathan P.
Hawkes, Stephen E.
Hayward, George
Heard, Charles
Hersey, Henry
Heywood, Levi
Hillard, George S.
Hinsdale, William
Hobart, Aaron
Hooper, Foster
Hopkinson, Thomas
Houghton, Samuel
Hubbard, William J.
Hunt, William
Hurlburt, Samuel A.
Hyde, Benjamin D.
Jackson, Samuel
James, William
Jenkins, John
Jenks, Samuel H.
Kellogg, Giles C.
Kuhn, George H.
Ladd, John S.
Lawton, Job G., Jr.
Lincoln, Frederic W., Jr.
Littlefield, Tristram
Livermore, Isaac
Lothrop, Samuel K.
Lod, Samuel P.
Lowell, John A.
Miller, Seth, Jr.
Mixer, Samuel
Morey, George
Morton, Marcus
Noyes, Daniel
Orcutt, Nathan
Paige, James W.
Parker, Adolphus G.
Parker, Joel
Peabody, George
Perkins, Daniel A.
Perkins, Jonathan C.
Phelps, Charles
Plunkett, William C.
Pomroy, Jeremiah
Prince, F. O.
Putnam, George
Rantoul, Robert
Read, James
Reed, Sampson
Rice, David
Richardson, Daniel
Ring, Elkanah, Jr.
Ross, David S.
Sargent, John
Schouler, William
Sherrill, John
Sleeper, John S.
Southern, John
Stetson, Caleb

Friday,] HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, &c. — EARLE — GARDNER — WILSON — BUTLER — WHITE — PARKER. [July 29th.

Stevens, Charles G.
Stevens, Joseph L., Jr.
Stevenson, J. Thomas
Stiles, Gideon
Talbot, Thomas
Thayer, Joseph
Tilston, Edmund P.
Train, C. R.
Tyler, John S.
Upham, Charles W.
Upton, George B.
Walcott, Samuel B.
Wales, Bradford L.

Walker, Samuel
Weeks, Cyrus
Wetmore, Thomas
Wheeler, William F.
White, Benjamin
Wilbur, Daniel
Wilbur, Joseph
Wilder, Joel
Wilkinson, Ezra
Williams, Henry
Wilson, Milo
Wood, Charles C.
Woods, Josiah B.

ABSENT.

Abbott, Alfred A.
Abbott, Josiah G.
Allen, Charles
Appleton, William
Ballard, Alvah
Banks, Nathaniel P., Jr.
Bartlett, Russel
Beach, Erasmus D.
Blagden, George W.
Bliss, William C.
Braman, Milton P.
Bullen, Amos H.
Bumpus, Cephas C.
Carter, Timothy W.
Clarke, Stillman
Copeland, Benjamin F.
Cressy, Oliver S.
Crowell, Seth
Crowninshield, F. B.
Cummings, Joseph
Curtis, Wilber
Dana, Richard H., Jr.
Dehon, William
Eaton, Calvin D.
Fitch, Ezekiel W.
Foster, Abram
Gooch, Daniel W.
Greenleaf, Simon
Hall, Charles B.
Haskell, George
Henry, Samuel
Huntington, Asahel
Ide, Abijah M., Jr.
Jacobs, John
Kellogg, Martin R.
Kinsman, Henry W.

Knowlton, J. S. C.
Lawrence, Luther
Lincoln, Abishai
Lord, Otis P.
Marvin, Abijah P.
Marvin, Theophilus R.
Meader, Reuben
Morris, Joseph B.
Nayson, Jonathan
Newman, Charles
Norton, Alfred
Oliver, Henry K.
Packer, E. Wing
Park, John G.
Parker, Samuel D.
Parsons, Samuel C.
Parsons, Thomas A.
Payson, Thomas E.
Perkins, Noah C.
Pierce, Henry
Preston, Jonathan
Richardson, Nathan
Rockwell, Julius
Sampson, George R.
Sheldon, Luther
Sherman, Charles
Storror, Charles S.
Stutson, William
Taber, Isaac C.
Taylor, Ralph
Tower, Ephraim
Warner, Marshal
White, George
Wilkins, John H.
Wilson, Willard
Wood, William H.

Absent, and not voting, 72.

So the substitute was adopted.

The question next recurred upon ordering the resolve, as amended, to its second reading.

Mr. EARLE, of Worcester, called for the yeas and nays upon that question, but they were refused, by a vote of 35 in the affirmative, and 230 in the negative.

The question was then taken upon ordering the resolve, as amended, to a second reading, and it was decided in the affirmative—ayes, 183; noes, 90.

Mr. GRISWOLD, for Erving. I move that rule requiring the resolve to take its second reading to-morrow, be suspended, and that the resolve take its second reading at this time.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The resolve was then read a second time.

The question next recurring upon the final passage of the resolve,

Mr. GARDNER, of Boston. I move to amend the resolve, by striking out "1855," and inserting "1853."

Members of this Convention will see at once the effect of that amendment, if adopted. It will obviate the objection which the gentleman from Natick makes, to having the matter put to the people in such a way that there will be confusion existing. The question will not go to the people this fall, but the legislature to be chosen this fall, under the present system of representation, will divide the State into representative and senatorial districts, and a year from this fall, the people will be called upon to vote upon the question. Now, Sir, I presume that the debates of this Convention will be spread abroad in the community, and will be discussed generally throughout the State, and before they grow stale in the public mind, I should like to have the people vote upon these two propositions, and not have it put off until after the next decennial census of the State. And why not have it now? Why not have it a year from this time? I can see no objection to it, unless this is an objection, that if the division is made next year, it will be made by a legislature elected on the present basis of representation. If it is deferred, as proposed by the resolution, it will be made by the legislature, which every-body here confesses, is elected by a miserable minority of one-third of the community. That, Sir, is the only difference—a division made by a legislature elected by one-third of the people, or a division made by a legislature constituted as it will be hereafter.

The question does not require argument, or elaboration, to make it apparent to every mind. Every individual here grasps the idea, and I am willing to leave it with the Convention to decide, whether they will accept the amendment or not.

Mr. WILSON, of Natick. Not wishing to consume the time of the Convention, I simply say, in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Gardner,) that the Convention have already decided to have the decennial census taken in 1855, 1865, 1875, and so on, instead of the years 1850, 1860, &c., and thus my plan comes in, in exact accordance with that.

Mr. GARDNER. If this comes in in 1855, under the decennial census, why does he make it hereafter in 1866, 1876, &c.? And if they come in in 1866, how will they get at the decennial census taken the same year?

Mr. WILSON. The census is to be taken in 1855, 1865, 1875, &c. The legislature chosen in the autumn of 1855 will put this question out to the people, and the legislature chosen in 1856, will arrange the districts, which the people will decide upon in 1856. It comes in precisely with that arrangement, and for that reason it was so arranged.

Mr. PLUNKETT, of Adams. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment of the gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Gardner).

The yeas and nays were not ordered, one-fifth not voting therefor.

Mr. EARLE, of Worcester. I shall detain the Convention but for a moment, and that will be to state two reasons, and two only, why I should not be in favor of the proposed amendment. The first is, that if the districting is made according to the amendment, which will be a work of great labor, and occupy the attention of the legislature for some time, it can stand but for one year, because the census is to be taken in 1855, and the legislature elected in that year would be required to make a new apportionment under the new census. That alone, it appears to me, is a sufficient reason why the amendment should not be made.

Another reason is, that in the legislature to be elected in 1855, the whole State will be represented. While the one next elected, will not represent the whole State, because some towns have already exhausted their right to representation.

The question was then taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. Gardner, and the amendment was not agreed to.

The question again recurring upon the final passage of the resolve, as amended, was put, and decided in the affirmative—ayes, 189; noes, 82.

So the resolve was passed.

Sectarian Schools.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Convention now proceed to the consideration of the Orders of the Day.

The motion was agreed to, and the Convention proceeded to the consideration of the next matter upon the Orders of the Day, which was the motion of the gentleman from Quincy, (Mr. White,) to reconsider the vote by which the resolves upon the subject of sectarian schools were passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. I wish to say one word upon this subject, and that is, that after an examination of this matter, I can see no cause for an alteration of the Constitution in this respect. We have met no trouble, seen no difficulty, and there has been nothing sectarian heretofore in the division of the public moneys. I hope we shall not undertake to make an amendment to the Constitution, which has not been called for from any quarter. I trust the vote will be reconsidered.

Mr. WHITE, of Quincy. The reason why I made the motion to reconsider, was, that the resolve was taken up in rather a thin House, and passed without much consideration, and without any debate. As it contains a principle unlike anything in the present Constitution, I think it should have a full consideration. I ask the yeas and nays upon the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, one-fifth of those voting, not voting in the affirmative.

The question being upon a reconsideration of the vote by which the resolve was passed, the Secretary, upon the request of Mr. Plunkett, read the resolve, as follows:—

Resolved, That all moneys raised by taxation in the towns and cities for the support of Public Schools, and all moneys which may be appropriated by the State for the support of Common Schools, shall be applied to and expended in no other schools than those which are conducted according to law, under the order and superintendence of the authorities of the town or city in which the money is to be expended; and such moneys shall never be appropriated to any religious sect for the maintenance, exclusively, of its own schools.

Mr. PARKER, of Cambridge. I will detain the Convention but a moment at this time, when members appear to be so anxious to take the question. This resolve was introduced by me some days since, and it was printed for the information of the Convention. It was proposed as a substitute for the resolution reported by a committee, on account of some objection to the phraseology of that resolution, and with the view of placing this matter in such a shape that no objection could be taken to the form in which the measure was proposed. I moved on Wednesday of this week to take the documents from the table, and the adoption of this resolution as an amendment. There was, to be sure, at that time a thin House, but it was at the ordinary hour of business and after other business had been transacted. There was no springing of any surprise upon anybody, because I had previously, in the course of the forenoon, moved to lay the Orders of the Day upon the table, with the declared purpose of taking up this subject. It was known, therefore, that it was a matter before the Convention, and it might reasonably have been inferred that an attempt would be made to take it up at the earliest convenient time. It was adopted without any division, because there was hardly any opposition to it. It met with the approbation of nearly all the members of the Convention present at the time.

Friday,]

SECTARIAN SCHOOLS.—KEYES—BIRD—HALLETT.

[July 29th.

Now, Sir, I have heard no reason why this vote should be reconsidered, except it be the opinion of the gentleman from Lowell, (Mr. Butler,) that it is not necessary to take any action upon the subject. If that stands as a good reason for the action of the majority of this Convention, this vote will be reconsidered, of course. But unless it does, I trust that a measure so important to the welfare of this Commonwealth, as I regard this to be, will be suffered to stand as a part of the constitutional amendments to be proposed to the people.

Sir, this resolution has nothing sectarian in its character. It proposes simply to retain and secure your common schools in the condition in which they are at the present time, beyond all peradventure, come from what quarter an attempt for change may come—and I care not from what quarter it comes—and to secure them as the pride and glory of the State, the pride and glory of New England, and the foundation and support of our popular institutions. If the members of the Convention are prepared to say that they will not sustain a proposition to that effect, they will support this motion to reconsider, and strike out the resolution which has been adopted.

Mr. KEYES, for Abington. This resolution has been already adopted by the Convention. On reading it over, I find it contains a proposition that will always be held sound in Massachusetts. I trust no man, here or elsewhere, will say it is not just and proper. The inference to be drawn from it is, that we are opposed to having the public money which is raised for school purposes, applied to the support of sectarian schools. I will venture to say that every man in Massachusetts is in favor of it. If there is a man in Massachusetts who is opposed to it, he is an enemy to Massachusetts, an enemy to the school system of Massachusetts, and I presume there is no such man.

Now, Sir, there has not been a single reason given in favor of reconsideration. If there is any reason that can be given, it is some secret reason that men dare not avow. We may all have some idea what it may be. I do not believe, however, there is any foundation for the apprehension that seems to be entertained that the school money will be devoted to sectarian purposes. The people of Massachusetts are opposed to granting public money for sectarian schools; that we all know.

Mr. BIRD, of Walpole. I submit, Sir, with all respect for the gentleman for Abington, that the burden of proof does not rest upon us to show that this ought to be reconsidered, but upon those who oppose the reconsideration to show why the provision should stand as it is, and for this reason: Gentlemen know very well that this matter has never been discussed in this House, and the reasons have never been assigned why this provision should go into the Constitution. It came before us, was laid upon the table, several attempts were made to take it from the table, and the Convention uniformly refused. It came up finally at a time when very little attention was given to it, and very little consideration. An amendment was proposed by the gentleman from Cambridge, and it was adopted, with very few words from him, nothing like an argument, by a very small vote. And the resolve was passed to a second reading, and I believe the rule was suspended, and it was passed instant, or it may have gone over to the next day. At all events, it was passed sub silentio, just as it now stands, and I submit, that reasons have not yet been given why a change of this kind should be made in the Constitution.

I hope the motion will prevail, and that it will be reconsidered, even if, in the end, we do not adopt it. I want the reasons shown, that I may give the people in the narrow circle in which I move, the reasons why we should adopt this provision. I confess that, as at present advised, I cannot defend it.

I do not like the resolve. It does not say one word about giving any portion of the money of the State to colleges and higher seminaries of learning. Money may be appropriated to sectarian colleges, notwithstanding its adoption; and I submit that from our action here it may be inferred that we are willing that the public money should be given to sectarian academies and colleges. I am not willing that any such inference should be drawn from our action in regard to this matter.

And there is another objection. Everybody knows this resolution appears to be aimed at one class of our citizens, one denomination of religion. Nobody has intimated any apprehension that money would be used for the benefit of Protestant sectarianism. I have never heard that question raised in the State; but the question has been raised in the State, and discussed, in relation to the support of Catholic schools; and I am not willing, as one of the friends of the Constitution, that it should be embarrassed by any such provision. It is too important a question to be passed over in this manner, without any reasons given for and against it, and impatient as we all are to finish our labors here, I hope the Convention will look seriously at this matter before they assent to its being made a part of the organic law.

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham. I will only advert to one consideration, why I am opposed to touching this matter of conscience in the Constitution. I believe no man desires to establish an ecclesiastical tribunal; yet, in my judgment, this provision, in effect, does establish such a tribunal; and why? Because it declares that money raised for the support of common schools, "shall never be appropriated to any religious sect for the exclusive maintenance of its own schools." Now, what does that mean? What is a religious sect? What is a maintenance exclusively of the schools of a religious sect? Who is to determine whether the town's money has been appropriated to any religious sect, or not? Who is to say how far you may go in maintaining a sectarian school, and still not do it exclusively? Anything less than the whole is not exclusive. Therefore, you may apply your money to a sectarian school all but. Any exception will save it. Who shall settle this? It must be determined by some court. Therefore, your supreme court is to become, under this clause, an ecclesiastical court, to determine what is a religious sect, and what is the exclusive maintenance of a sectarian school. Then, how far are you to go in this matter of ecclesiastical definitions? What is the platform? It seems to me that here are difficulties of construction that you cannot avoid or surmount otherwise than by giving a new jurisdiction to the supreme court as an ecclesiastical tribunal. They are difficulties which the able gentleman who introduced this proposition, will find at the very outset, and increasing at every step.

Now, I am unwilling to incur the risk of raising a question here which is of extreme difficulty concerning religious opinions, and one which touches the conscience. What is there wrong about our public schools at present? Are they devoted to sectarian purposes? Is your money going to establish sectarian schools? Nobody asserts that such is the case; but somebody imagines that such a state of things may arise in the future; that sectarian schools are going to be established; that some new sect may outvote the Protestants, and claim the school fund. I have no fears on that score. I want free opinions, and I would no sooner give Protestants than Catholics the power to control religious opinions and sentiments. But I do not want, if I can avoid it, to put a firebrand into our town meetings, by raising this imaginary issue, which will never come if we let it alone. You are treading upon delicate ground, when you undertake to interfere with men's consciences. What is the meaning of that proposition? We propose to declare, that no part of the money that is raised for school purposes shall be appropriated to any other purpose, except to its legitimate uses, for fear we may do something that will favor sectarianism. We contend that it is all right now, but we are afraid of something ahead. Where will it end? Your town meetings will be thrown into confusion, by contentions about the religious opinions of school teachers. Men will get together, and undertake, as in the times of Gov. Winthrop, to regulate men's consciences. It will be as difficult to settle a schoolmaster as a minister.

Have we not got past this meddling with conscience? It appears we have not entirely, for this Convention has, by refusing to amend the Bill of Rights, relating to religious opinions, solemnly declared, that a man "shall be molested for his opinions and sentiments concerning religion." That is bad enough. And that is far enough to go. I thought it too far: to say that in this good Commonwealth we shall undertake to interfere with any man's religious belief, and that no man shall be unmolested who is so unfortunate as conscientiously to be without any religious belief. Nevertheless, I submit to that decision here, and will patiently wait for liberal progress, in the hope that another generation will be more enlightened. But, pray, let us have no more of sectarianism in our Constitution. And let us have no interdiction, or intermeddling in opinions of this sort. I do not believe the learned gentleman who introduced this proposition, intends any such thing, as to exclude a particular religious sect from our public schools. I know him to be of a very different spirit; but I say, that is the construction I put upon it. And many others understand it in the same way, and the very doubt it raises, is reason enough to reject it. I hope, therefore, that we shall agree to the reconsideration, and then strike the provision out altogether, as one of doubtful meaning and expediency.

Friday,]

SECTARIAN SCHOOLS. — WOOD — LOTHROP — CADY.

[July 29th.]

Mr. WOOD, of Fitchburg. My attention has just been called to this resolution, and that brings to my recollection some little question regarding this subject, which arose in my own town. We have, growing up, between three and four hundred Irish children. About one in twenty of these go to our common schools. Many of the intelligent Irish do not and will not send their children to our schools. I had a conversation with one of these, a man who desires the advancement of learning as much as I or any man in the State. I asked him why he would not send to our schools. His answer was: "I will not send my children to a sectarian school." "A sectarian school?" said I. "Heavens! I did not know that our schools were sectarian." "Well," said he, "that is just the way with you here in America, and with religionists all over the world. Our sect is no sect; every-body else is sectarian. Now," said he, "what constitutes a sectarian school? It is where you will have all the Protestant forms of worship introduced. You will insist on having prayers according to the Protestant forms. You introduce your Protestant Bibles and other Protestant books, and you will have none other. Now, I put it to you, would you be willing to send your children to be instructed by Roman Catholic priests; to be compelled to read their Bible, and have comments upon it?" I said "No." "Very well, then, you ought not to expect us to do it." Now, I put it to this Convention, how it is possible to raise any money by taxes to be expended for common schools, if it cannot be expended for either Protestant or Roman Catholic schools?

Now, let me say another thing. It is all important that our Irish children should be educated. It is as important to us as it is to the Irish themselves. We do not want them to grow up amongst us, ignorant and vicious, first to rob our hen-roosts, and afterwards to commit more serious offences. It is all important that they should be educated. If we cannot educate them in such schools as we have, let us give them such schools as they can accept. And I would appropriate money for that purpose. Their own forms are dear to them, and they will not send their children where there is danger that their minds will be perverted, if not converted. Therefore, although I want no money to be appropriated to sectarianism, I would devote a portion of the money that is designed for common school purposes, to furnish schools for them. As for compelling them to attend our schools, I would do no such thing. I would let the matter, as regards that, take its natural course; there should be no compulsion on that score. We have a sufficient sense of liberty—the Irish have themselves—to know that there should be no constraint about the matter. Formerly, it was said that they would do nothing contrary to the wishes and orders of their priests, that they believed them to be God's vicegerents on earth; but they are getting over that. So I think there need be no alarm in regard to the Roman Catholics; for I cannot help thinking that this has a strong squinting against them. We may proscribe them, put a clog upon them, attempt in every way to render them a degraded race; but be assured they will not continue to be a degraded race in Massachusetts, or in the other States of the Union; not that I fear them; but let us treat them liberally—give them a fair chance to come and be identified with us, that their sympathies may be as ours. Pass no law, especially no fundamental law, against any sect in religion. I hope the vote will be reconsidered.

Mr. LOTHROP, of Boston. The resolution which it is proposed shall be reconsidered, was introduced by the gentleman from Cambridge, as an amendment to the Report of the Committee on the Encouragement of Literature, of which I had the honor to be a member. The attention of the Committee was called to the subject, by an order passed in Convention and referred to it. I agree, Sir, with the remark that has been made by two gentlemen, that if the subject had not been brought up at all it would have been better. Gentlemen have said we are introducing a new thought, principle, or suggestion, into the Constitution; that there is nothing in the old Constitution about it, and should not be in the new; that the matter would be left safe and well, without this resolution. Very true. There is nothing in the old Constitution relating in direct and express terms to the subject; and if the order which was the basis of this resolution had not been introduced, I should not have been in favor of making any more special provisions in regard to sectarianism in our public schools, than exist in the present Constitution. But, inasmuch as the subject has been brought before the Convention, and reported upon, and that report adopted, I believe, now, it would be impolitic and injurious, to reconsider, and strike out the resolution which has been passed. It would be equivalent to saying that we do approve of sectarian schools.

As has been stated by the gentleman from Walpole, the matter passed without much consideration, was carried rapidly through its several stages. The resolution was quietly adopted by a large vote, with scarcely a show of opposition. And, for this very reason, it seems to me that the task rests not with those who oppose, but with those who favor the reconsideration, to show reasons why it should be reconsidered. The subject having been thus brought before us, and acted upon, I believe and maintain that, in the present condition and prospects of the community, it is highly desirable that we should incorporate into the Constitution the fundamental principle laid down in the resolution, and instead of promoting sectarianism, or making it necessary to establish a board to ascertain and determine what sectarianism is, it will have the effect to suppress it. I maintain that the establishment of common schools, in which the great mass of the children of the community, of all religious denominations, are educated together, is the only way in which we can prevent and keep down the spirit of sectarianism. I ask the gentleman from Fitchburg, if he believes that his policy or plan will tend to prevent sectarianism? Sir, it is the plan which will tend, of all others, to spread sectarianism through all our families, down to the youngest children, and educate them in intense religious hatred of each other. Sir, I want all our children, the children of our Catholic and Protestant population, to be educated together in our public schools. And if gentlemen say that the resolution has a strong leaning towards the Catholics, and is intended to have special reference to them, I am not disposed to deny that it admits of such interpretation. I am ready and disposed to say to our Catholic fellow-citizens: "You may come here and meet us on the broad principles of civil and religious liberty, but if you cannot meet us upon this common ground, we do not ask you to come. It is your own choice, and if you cannot be content with the general privileges, which you share here in common with all, you have no right to complain. Here are our public schools, they are free to all the various denominations, Baptist, Methodist, Episcopalian, Congregationalist, Trinitarian, Unitarian. They are free to all, Catholic and Protestant. We all send our children to these schools, we all meet together in town meeting, and determine how much money we shall raise for this great purpose of education, thus common to all, and that money is expended in schools in which the peculiarities of no one sect are insisted upon or interfered with." I wish all children to be educated, not as members of religious sects, not as belonging to one religious party or another, but to come together on one common ground, as children of the State, to be educated together in mutual respect, forbearance, and good will, so far as differences of religious opinion are concerned. Sir, our common school system has been, and is now, conducted upon these liberal principles; and, I say, it is this school system that has done as much as any other one cause, to determine the character and condition of the people of Massachusetts.

Mr. WOOD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him what he would propose to do, suppose any religious denomination refuse to send their children to your schools?

Mr. LOTHROP. I will answer the gentleman by saying that if we establish our system of common schools upon broad, liberal principles; if we open the door wide, and give all a fair and equal chance to come, we may rest assured that the great mass of the community will avail themselves of the privilege; and if any do not, the fault will not be in the system, but in the narrowness and bigotry of those who prefer that their children should grow up in ignorance, unless they can send them to a sectarian school. The community will have done all that it can be asked to do.

Mr. CADY, of Monson. If I am rightly informed, the children of our Irish population are obliged to attend our common schools. It is a penal offence for them not to attend.

Mr. LOTHROP. I shall detain the Convention but a few moments more. I cannot but think this is a question of great importance; and our action upon it will have much influence upon the future character of Massachusetts. Sir, the subject of common schools has been a subject of much difficulty in all countries in the world. Where the attempt has been made to introduce a system of public education, in all countries where the attempt has failed, sectarianism, in one form or another, has been the cause. Is not sectarianism the very thing we are here trying to prevent, so far as our common schools are concerned? There is none of it now in these schools; and the only way in which you can prevent its introduction and influence, is to adopt the principle of the resolution it is proposed to reconsider. It is only upon this principle that we shall be able to conduct our common schools successfully, keep them free from sectarianism,

Friday.]

SECTARIAN SCHOOLS.—FROTHINGHAM—CHAPIN—COGSWELL—CHANDLER.

[July 29th.

and make them one of the great fountains of life and strength, prosperity and power, to the people of this Commonwealth. It is very well known that there are broad general religious truths, great fundamental religious ideas and principles, upon which all can unite, and where these alone—as is the case in our common schools—are recognized, and impressed upon the minds of the young, there will be, there can be, no sectarianism; nothing of such a character as that a Protestant or a Catholic, or a person of any religion whatever, would be unwilling to have his children attend the school. If he regards the best interests of his child he will send him to such a school. I maintain that no Catholic, no Protestant, no person of any denomination, can go into any of our public schools and say that there is anything taught there that he should be unwilling that his child should learn; or that anything is done to change or interfere with his religious opinions.

I hope the motion for reconsideration will not prevail; and that, as the matter has come up and has been acted upon once, we shall abide by that action, and adhere to the principle which is contained in the resolution.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM, of Charlestown. I have but one word to say in reference to this matter. It seems to me, that when the gentleman from Boston remarked that it had been better that the subject had not been introduced into this Convention, he yielded the whole point. Now, Sir, as that gentleman has stated, the subject was before the Committee of which I have the honor to be a member, and there, Sir, I took the ground against incorporating anything of this sort into the Constitution, simply because it was better to leave well enough alone; simply because it was unnecessary; simply because our common schools, as they are now, are open to all to be enjoyed in common, as free as the air we breathe; and I say, so let them remain, because the matter is governed by the unwritten law of public opinion of Massachusetts, and as well governed thus as it could be by any statute law or constitutional law that could be enacted.

Now, it seems to me, that our Constitution, when it provides that all denominations shall be placed upon a footing of equality, provides for each and every case of this kind that can arise; and I am in favor of the reconsideration and rejection of this resolution, simply and solely on the ground that it is putting unnecessary matter into the Constitution.

Mr. CHAPIN, of Webster. I wish to say a few words before recording my vote upon this question, in order that I may stand right before the community, and especially before posterity, for I regard this as not particularly affecting the present generation, but as prospective in its operation. I believe the policy of this Commonwealth, from the beginning of our government up to the present time, has been, to have but one class of schools, and they have been called common schools. They admit, and even require the attendance of all children between certain ages, in the Commonwealth. They are common schools, because the system of instruction is common to them all, and they are not allowed to introduce sectarianism, even under the present law; and I think the gentleman from Fitchburg will find it difficult to establish, from the law as it now stands, the proposition that sectarianism is permitted. Sir, a man is not allowed to go into our common schools, and teach the doctrine of the Congregationalists, the Baptists, or any other, as a creed; we are, therefore, adopting what is in exact conformity with the past usage of the Commonwealth. And I think it is perfectly right to do so. It establishes permanently, for the time to come, that which is approved by the universal sentiment of Massachusetts.

It has been said, there is no occasion or necessity for the introduction of a provision of this kind; that no efforts have been made to establish sectarian schools. But it is well known, that efforts have been made in other parts of the Union. New York and other States have been afflicted with excitement on the subject. And I think it would be well to consider whether, in this State, we are not approaching the same condition, and whether it is not our best policy, to guard against it in time. I can see a reason for incorporating such a provision, in the very excitement that prevails in this Convention to-day. There is great sensitiveness manifested here, at the very mention of the subject. But it is contended, that the introduction of this provision will endanger the adoption by the people, of all the other amendments that we propose to make to the Constitution. I do not believe there is a man in Massachusetts, save one, who has the power to establish sectarianism; I do not believe there is a gentleman here, who thinks it right to do so, but there are gentlemen here who believe that the introduction of this provision will embarrass the amended Constitution, if not defeat it. Well, Sir, if we are embarrassed by the mere offering of the proposition, I think we had better understand it now, before it is too late; and, for this reason above all others, I shall go for the proposition embraced in the resolution, and against reconsideration.

Mr. COGSWELL, of Yarmouth. As one of the Committee from whom the Report on this subject was made, I desire to state one or two considerations that induced the Committee to report the resolution, the subject having been referred to them by an order of the Convention. It is well known, Sir, though it may not be known to all the members of this Convention, that the different religious denominations in this State, and in other States, have had this subject under consideration. The Presbyterian Church, especially, which comprises a great portion of Massachusetts, and of the Western and Middle States, have agitated the question. The Committee thought, that by putting an article of this kind into the Constitution, it would put an end to all controversy on the subject. It was not aimed at any particular sect, but was intended to cut off all sectional and denominational disputes on the subject of the distribution of the money raised for the support of schools, whether derived from taxation or from the common school fund, with the view of devoting it to the support of denominational schools. This was the object of the resolution reported by the Committee. The great object was, to preserve our common schools just as they are now managed, for all coming time. Massachusetts claims the honor of having been the first to introduce the common school system, and it has always been the practice to instruct all alike, without regard to differences in religious belief. The object is, to leave the system where it now is, for all coming time; to provide, that money to be raised for schools, shall never be devoted to the support of denominational schools. We have now, in this State, a fund of more than a million of dollars for common school purposes—it will soon be a million and a half. Well, now, I think nothing would be more disastrous than the application of this money to sectarian uses. It would be striking a blow at our civil institutions, to have this money divided among different denominations of religion. These were the reasons, and they were recognized by the Convention, for when the proposition was reported, no objection was made to it. It was thought to be highly necessary and proper, that such a constitutional provision should be enacted. And now, all on a sudden, gentlemen turn round and oppose it. I hope that it will not be reconsidered, but that it will be made a part of the amended Constitution. We may then reasonably expect that our schools will, in all coming time, continue to be conducted precisely as they have been heretofore.

Mr. CHANDLER, of Greenfield. When this motion to reconsider was made, I felt a great degree of indifference about it, because I considered that all the provision that was necessary to be made in relation to this subject had been made in a previous resolution. It has, however, assumed an importance in my mind since, more particularly, from the great misunderstanding which appears to prevail respecting the object designed to be accomplished by it. I had the honor to be upon the Committee to whom was referred an order to provide for the raising of a fund for a particular use,—to be appropriated to the support and maintenance of our common schools, as they now exist, in accordance with the system which has prevailed from the beginning. The Committee agreed upon a resolution to be presented to the Convention, providing for the raising of such fund. Well, if we consider the fund raised, what is to be done with it? The order under which the Committee was formed, made it imperative on the Committee to raise a fund for common schools, the great object being to secure the application of such fund to the purpose contemplated, viz.: the support and maintenance of our common schools, as they are, and prevent its being frittered away, or misapplied. Well, the question came up, is there any danger to be apprehended from sectarianism? Is there danger that any efforts will be made to divert any part of this fund to sectarian uses? That appeared to be the idea. That appeared to be the thing to be guarded against. It seemed to be supposed that various denominations in different parts of the country were endeavoring to get possession of the school funds, for the use of their own peculiar schools, not only the Catholics, but others. We wished, therefore, to secure the fund for the object for which it was provided, that is, for common schools, generally, without designating any particular system. Now, if we take the position that a part of this fund may be given to one denomination, another may come in and claim the same privilege, and another, and another, until the fund is completely exhausted, and perverted from its original design. We wish to avoid this. We do not require the Constitution to forbid the bestowal of money upon any college in the State, sectarian, or otherwise, but the money thus appropriated is not to come out of this fund. This is to be regarded as sacred, and kept exclusively for the particular use for which it was designed. This is all, so far as I understand it, that was contemplated by the Committee. If the Convention do not approve of this principle, if they wish to leave the door open, for the distribution of this fund in the manner I have indicated, they ought to go back and reconsider the vote by which they accepted of the proposition which provides that that fund shall be devoted to a particular and specific use.

Friday,]

SECTARIAN SCHOOLS. — WARD — BUTLER — LOTHROP — JENKS — BALL.

[July 29th.]

Mr. WARD, of Newton. Is an amendment now in order?

The PRESIDENT. An amendment is not now in order. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WARD. I should like to have an opportunity to move to strike out the two last lines of the resolution, which it is moved to reconsider. The money would then be appropriated according to law, and in no other way.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. I have no wish, Sir, to take up time, at this late hour, in debate, and it was this reluctance to consume the time unnecessarily, which induced me, when I addressed you before, to confine myself to a very few words, simply saying that I hoped this matter would be reconsidered, not supposing that I should thereby expose myself to the censure of the gentleman from Cambridge, (Mr. Parker,) that I had presumed to dictate to the Convention a course of action, without assigning any reasons why that course should be adopted. I have, thank God, a reason for the "faith that is in me," and I wish to say, first, that I look upon this resolution as the most sectarian resolution that can be brought before a deliberative assembly. And if I cannot convince gentlemen that it is so, I will give up all pretension to a knowledge of the principles of men's action from what they do.

Now for the history of this matter. An order was introduced on the thirteenth of June and referred to the Committee on the Encouragement of Literature, of which my friend from Pittsfield, (Mr. Briggs,) is chairman, and I am sorry he is not here to help me against this sectarian attack upon the resolve which that Committee reported. The order instructed the Committee to inquire into the expediency of so amending the Constitution, that the school fund belonging to the Commonwealth shall never be appropriated or applied to the support of any sectarian schools, or schools founded upon sectarian principles.

The Committee reported a resolve, which is as follows:—

Resolved, That it is expedient so to amend the Constitution as to provide that no public money, in this Commonwealth, whether accruing from funds, or raised by taxation, shall ever be appropriated for the support of sectarian or denominational schools.

That covered all schools, Sir, from the humble village school up to Harvard University. It precluded the appropriation of money to the support of sectarian or denominational schools, of whatever grade, or class, or description. It precluded the appropriation of money to be expended for the benefit of Harvard University, because that is a sectarian school. And so of all other colleges. That is what was reported by the Committee. Then, without a word of explanation, comes this amendment from the representative of Harvard College—the guardian of the interests of that institution in this Convention; drawn with all the skill of a lawyer, and a very good lawyer too:—

That all moneys raised by taxation, in the towns and cities, for the support of public schools, and all moneys which may be appropriated by the State for the support of common schools, shall be applied to and expended in no other schools than those which are conducted according to law, under the order and superintendence of the authorities of the town or city in which the money is to be expended; and such moneys shall never be appropriated to any religious sect for the maintenance, exclusively, of its own schools.

Leaving it open for money to be appropriated and distributed broadcast, if you please, hither and yon—to Harvard, to Williams, and to Amherst College, or any other institution of learning, whether sectarian or otherwise. A carefully and technically worded resolution. What do we want with such a provision? In the first place, the school shall be kept according to law. That is the first item. In the name of all that is good, why not put into the Constitution that when it rains it shall rain? That is all we have got here until we come to the sting in the tail, which is this: "shall never be appropriated to any religious sect for the maintenance, exclusively, of its own schools."

Now, one word in reference to the remarks of the gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Lothrop,) whom I commend for his morality. He says he wants every Catholic child to go to our common schools; and the gentleman from Fitchburg, (Mr. Wood,) says they may be compelled to go.

Mr. LOTHROP. I am quite confident, Sir, that I could not have used those words—that I wanted every Catholic child to go to our common schools. I said I wanted all our Irish population to send their children to our common schools.

Mr. BUTLER. I am bound to take the gentleman's recantation; but, Sir, I am not mistaken. The gentleman said—and the expression was accompanied with a very emphatic waive of the hand—I want all Catholic children to go to our schools.

Mr. LOTHROP. I could not have said that.

Mr. BUTLER. My recollection is perfect, Sir, as was the elocution of the gentleman. "I want all Catholic children," says the gentleman, "to go to our Protestant schools." Those are the words. I called the attention of several gentlemen to them at the time they were uttered. And I appeal to the reporter's notes whether I am not correct. Sir, I was educated in our common schools—

Mr. LOTHROP. I rise to a question of order.

I understood the gentleman to accede to my recantation, as he chooses to call it. If he accedes to that, I maintain he has no right to continue to argue as if I had used the language which he attributed to me. I maintain that I did not use the expression, that I wished Catholics to go to Protestants schools. I know myself too well to believe that I could have said any such thing. And, if the gentleman insists on fastening it upon me, I must appeal to the House. If the gentleman accepts my explanation, he must not go on arguing as if I had used that language.

Mr. BUTLER. Again, I say, I yield to the gentleman's repudiation of his language, if he says he did not mean it; but if he says he did not say it, I repeat, that he did say it. I thought it was said in heat, and without due consideration.

Mr. JENKS, of Boston. I sat much nearer to the gentleman from Boston (Mr. Lothrop) than the gentleman from Lowell did, and I know that he did not make use of the word Protestant.

The PRESIDENT. This is not strictly a question of order. It is a mere difference of opinion as to the language used by the gentleman from Boston.

Mr. BUTLER. I will not dwell upon it, Sir. I have stated the language that was used by the gentleman; I now pass from that. I was proceeding to say, that I was reared in Protestant schools where some gentlemen say there is no sectarianism. The first Class Book that was put into my hands was one prepared by an eminent Unitarian clergyman; and in that I read sentiments calculated to instill into the mind a detestation of Catholics. I imbibed such detestation, and when I first saw a Catholic, I thought I was looking upon a monster, and almost expected to see the cloven foot. Yet, gentlemen will say such teaching is not sectarian.

My friend on the left, (Mr. Chandler,)—and what he says commends itself to me on account of his mature years and ripened judgment,—says he does not want any sectarianism introduced into our schools, on one side, or the other. He says the system works admirably; that it is an admirable common school system. Why tinker with it then? Why meddle with it at all, if it works so well, and is so admirable? Why, my friend says, because in other States there is trouble. Let those States take care of themselves. Why should we foresee trouble, and create it by an attempted resistance to it. The moment you send out this declaration, it will enter into all your elections everywhere, as an element of agitation. If you strike the first blow, the fight is begun. Let him that is without sin among you cast the first stone. We teach Protestantism, and believe it to be right, and we glory in that belief. But is that any reason why we should force it upon our neighbors? Why we should say we will tax you for the teaching of our Protestantism? Is it any less proper for the Universalists, or Baptists to say, there is no sectarian issue in their teaching. Those who have religious creeds differing from our own, worship the same God, bow before the same altar, read from the same Bible; but differ in its interpretation. Now, I ask gentlemen, if they are ready to introduce such a controversy into the politics of this State? For one, I wash my hands of it. I want our school system to remain as it is.

It is said that a difficulty has arisen in other States. Grant it as much as you please. Why should we precipitate it here? Why should we be thus tormented, before our time? If it must come, the legislature will meet it. I want the reconsideration for the reason given by my friend from Newton, (Mr. Ward,) in order to strike out the last two lines of the resolution. I will then vote for it, although it will be something like the boy's brandy and water with the brandy left out. [A laugh.] It will then be:—

Resolved, That all moneys, &c., for the support of common schools shall be applied to and expended in no other schools than those which are conducted according to law."

Well, how are you to apply it in any other way? All I have to say of it is, Parturient montes et nascitur ridiculus mus.

Mr. BALL, of Upton. If I wanted a text upon which to preach, I should have it in the

Friday.]

SECTARIAN SCHOOLS. — BALL — WHITNEY — CROWNINSHIELD — PARKER.

[July 29th.]

proposition before you. The resolution passed without a word being said about it. Gentlemen were all perfectly well satisfied that it contained the principle which they were all in favor of; and then all at once, just at the close of the session, they start up and say that the great mass of the citizens of Massachusetts are arrayed against it, and that they will vote down the new Constitution if this proposition is retained in it. And in the name of all that is good and sacred, let us—say they—O! let us withdraw it, that our amended Constitution may not be lost. The gentleman from Lowell, (Mr. Butler,) has made a strong argument against withdrawing the provision. He says that when he went to the public schools he was taught from sectarian books—that the books used were clearly and decidedly sectarian. If this be so, it is highly necessary that measures should be taken to free those schools from sectarianism. I am ready, on his own showing, to vote against the reconsideration. Is not this new movement like something we have had before in this State, one of the compromises made for the purpose of damning to eternal infamy a party that is dreaded? Will gentlemen withdraw from the position they took, because they fear the Catholics? Sir, I am known to all the Catholics of my town, and I will venture to say, that in voting to retain this provision, I shall not be regarded by them as being sectarian. If our schools have any thing that is sectarian, let us remove it, let us correct the evil as speedily as possible. If we have done wrong in the past, is it any reason why we should continue to do wrong? If we have sectarian books in our schools now, is that a reason why we should continue to use such? No, Sir; if we would all meet upon common ground, let us incorporate this provision in the Constitution, and keep it there. A compromise to be made at this last moment! A compromise, for what? For fear the people of Massachusetts should become sectarian? For fear of the Catholics? Great God! We have nothing to fear from the Catholics. They are more our friends than our enemies. Open your doors wide to all, and banish sectarianism from your schools, and Catholics will become Protestants through the influence of these schools. For these reasons, I trust the provision will be retained. I trust the Convention is not ready to withdraw from the position it has taken, a position that was fair, and honest, and proper at the time it was taken, and so regarded by every one.

Mr. WHITNEY, of Conway. It seems to me, Sir, that this debate must satisfy every gentleman, that in placing such an amendment as this in the Constitution, we are treading upon delicate ground. It appears to me that when we look around over the good old Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and see how harmoniously and successfully our common school system is operating, and when we consider that no attempt has ever been made to introduce sectarianism, we cannot fail to be convinced that the introduction of such a provision as this into the Constitution, must be productive of injurious consequences, and that it would be far better to leave the article in relation to our common schools as it now stands, and leave all religious sects to stand upon the same footing, without any subordination of one to another, and without any preference of one over another in the matter of education in the schools of the State. It seems to me it would be far better, as has been well said by the gentleman from Charlestown, to let well enough alone. The introduction of this provision into the Constitution, I submit, may give rise to agitations which will seriously disturb your common schools throughout Massachusetts. How is it in your little towns now? Your school committees are, to a great extent, composed of the clergymen of various religious sects, Baptists, Presbyterians, and even Catholics, and no complaint that I am aware of is made. Well, now, insert such a provision; and may it not be said by persons disposed to seek objections, you are making an unequal appropriation or supervision so far as sects are concerned, of your school fund? You are endeavoring to prevent the appropriation of the fund to a school that is sectarian, and yet you have upon your school committees men who are sectarian. How are you going to make answer under these constitutional provisions? In my opinion, you will produce much trouble and confusion in your common schools throughout the Commonwealth. And I can see no reason to apprehend that the money to be appropriated for common school purposes from any quarter, is to be applied for sectarian purposes. The public sentiment is more and more doing away with sectarian bias, as connected with public schools. Why agitate this question? It will only be bringing about the very result which we wish to avoid. I think, as I have said, that we are well enough at present, and that we had better let well enough alone. It will be impossible to find men who are outside or beyond the power of sectarian bias, to some extent, for your school committees; but public sentiment is such, that you will find no improper application of sectarian influences in your common schools.

It has been remarked that the Committee would not have introduced this question, but inasmuch as it had been introduced, it was a reason why we should go farther on. Why, Sir, if it was unwise to introduce it here, it certainly would be still more unwise to incorporate it into your Constitution. As the gentleman from Lowell, (Mr. Butler,) remarked, why declare in your Constitution a universally acknowledged principle. I see no reason except for the purpose of exciting agitation upon this question; why not then reconsider this motion? Agitation will be most likely to result from a proposition of this character, and the effect of such agitation, would, in the end, be most disastrous. I hope the motion to reconsider will prevail.

Mr. CROWNINSHIELD, of Boston. I shall not detain the Convention many minutes. I have only this to say, that I can assure gentlemen, their Catholic friends are not so weak as to be caught by such chaff as this. Sir, as I understand this question, the provision has gone through the usual stages, and has been finally passed, and now gentlemen wake up and move a reconsideration, because they are afraid of the effect it may have upon the Catholic population of the Commonwealth. Sir, gentlemen have sat in their seats while this provision passed through all its stages to its final passage, and no voice was raised against it. And now, on the very last day, or last but one of the session, lo! a violent indignation is gotten up against the resolution, and it is insisted that it must be expunged. Now, Sir, I happen to know something about the feeling of the Catholics in regard to this Convention, and I tell gentlemen the Catholics are not to be led away by any such proceeding as this. The Catholics understand it. They know the object of it, and they know the purpose for which the resolution was originally passed. They know, too, that the great question of representation has been passed so as to disfranchise them. And if gentlemen suppose that such a movement as this is to conciliate them, let me tell them they are mistaken.

Mr. THOMAS, of Weymouth, moved the previous question.

Mr. PARKER, of Cambridge. I hope the gentleman from Weymouth will withdraw the motion for the previous question, to enable me to make some reply, not only to the arguments which have been offered, but to the personal attack which has been made upon me by the gentleman—I mean by the member from Lowell.

Mr. THOMAS, of Weymouth. If the gentleman will renew it, at the close of his remarks, I will consent.

Mr. PARKER. I will do so.

Mr. BATES, of Plymouth. I believe the gentleman from Cambridge has already spoken upon this question.

Mr. PARKER. I have, Sir, and have the floor again, by the recognition of the President.

Mr. BATES. I believe the gentleman has spoken his fifteen minutes.

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman is mistaken. I did not occupy over half that time.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Cambridge has spoken once, but he has not occupied his full time.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. President: I have known something of the gentleman—of the member from Lowell—for some time, and I have heard considerable of him, first and last, and perhaps I ought not to be surprised at anything coming from him, and yet I am. I am truly surprised at the personal attack which he has allowed himself to make upon me, upon the floor of the Convention to-day, as I had said nothing to provoke such an attack from that gentleman, or rather, from that member. It is true, I had some agency in introducing this resolution—a resolution which has passed without a division—so unanimous was the feeling in favor of it. A motion for reconsideration was made, and the gentleman—the member from Lowell—Sir, I have been in the habit of calling him the gentleman from Lowell, and will continue so to do—took the floor, and expressed his personal wish, without reason or argument to support it, that this matter should be reconsidered, as if his personal wish was sufficient to determine the action of the Convention, and induce them to undo all that they had done; and upon this it seemed as if the question was about to be taken. It was in reference to that; because I had no argument to answer, and because it was for those who favored the reconsideration, to offer some reasons why the action of the Convention should be changed, that I said, in substance, that if that gentleman's mere wishes were to determine the action of the Convention, it was well that it should be understood. I supposed there was some reason that might be offered. We have now been favored with a reason. And I desire to make a few remarks in reply; but I must be permitted again to say, I am astonished that the gentleman from Lowell should have forgotten all courtesy, and have been guilty of the indecorum

Friday,]

SECTARIAN SCHOOLS. — PARKER — WOOD — BUTLER.

[July 29th.

of speaking of me as the representative of Harvard University. Sir, it was an indecorum that I should hardly have expected, even from him. Sir, I am not the representative of Harvard College. I have no such relations with that institution as will justify any one in speaking of me as its representative. Nor have I used an argument that would authorize anybody to speak of me in that way. It is true, that I am connected with one of the professional schools in that institution; but so far as that is concerned, the gentleman might as well be characterized as a representative of a law office in the city of Lowell.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to say that he did not understand the gentleman from Lowell as speaking of the gentleman from Cambridge as the representative of Harvard College.

Mr. PARKER. Sir, he spoke of me as representing Harvard College, and he imputed motives with reference to that institution as the governing motives with me in offering this resolution, and as the inducement for its introduction. That was the burden of his speech—that it was clearly to be seen what were the influences which induced the gentleman from Cambridge to act in this matter. Now, I trust I need not disclaim, before the members of this Convention, any such motives. I trust my conduct on this floor has commended me so far to gentlemen here, that they do not need my disclaimer of being actuated by any other motives than those of a member desirous of doing his duty. But enough of that. The gentleman from Walpole (Mr. Bird) suggested that there had been no reason offered why this measure should be adopted by the Convention. Sir, as I said before, I supposed it was for the friends of the reconsideration to show why the action of the Convention should be changed. But I was ready with reasons, and have been attempting to gain the floor for the purpose of stating them; but the rules of the Convention gave it to others, because I had spoken once.

Sir, we have heard reasons assigned from various quarters, but an additional fact or two may be stated. One gentleman, a member, has informed me, since the commencement of the session, that his parish clergyman, an Episcopalian, a very worthy man, declared to him that they must have parish schools. Another gentleman in the Convention has stated that he heard a very worthy Congregationalist clergyman declare it was necessary for his denomination to have such schools. Sir, it is not the Catholics alone who are looking to the school fund as a means of sustaining their peculiar tenets. Nor does this resolution, in its terms, have any reference to them at all; but they have been introduced, and the statements which have been made only add another to the evidences to show that it is necessary that something should be done here. Sir, nothing more is necessary to show the necessity for a constitutional provision, than to refer to the arguments of the gentleman from Fitchburg, and the gentleman from Conway, and others. The gentleman from Wilbraham says he does not want to put a firebrand into the town meetings. Sir, the object of this resolution is to extinguish the firebrand. The gentleman from Fitchburg admits that there is no law for it, but he proposes to appropriate a part of this money to sectarian purposes. He avows it here.

Mr. WOOD. No, Sir. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. PARKER. Not sectarian; but he proposes to give the Catholics their share.

Mr. WOOD. For the purposes of education.

Mr. PARKER. Yes; for the purposes of education, according to their peculiar notions. Now, that very circumstance, the very excitement which is found to exist upon this subject in this Convention, shows conclusively why we should take action upon it, and extinguish the firebrand, so that it shall not be possible to rekindle it and make it the means of a conflagration which may destroy your common schools. They are in danger, undoubtedly.

The gentleman from Wilbraham finds it difficult to understand the resolution. He cannot understand the meaning of the word "sect." Sir, that gentleman does not ordinarily find any difficulty in ascertaining the meaning of anything which he wishes to understand. But he can ask for definitions when a proposition does not suit him. It was but the other day that he wanted a definition of the word "blasphemy," and when he had got that, he wanted a definition of "contumeliously;" and now he wants a definition of the word "sect." Sir, if the gentleman cannot understand it, let him put it to a jury as a part of law and the fact, and it will readily be settled for him. [A laugh.]

Sir, the reasons that are given for the reconsideration, are altogether contradictory.

One gentleman is for doing nothing, because, he says, it is altogether unnecessary; because there is no agitation, and will be none. Another is opposed to the resolution because it will cause a serious agitation; because the very mention of it here produces excitement. Well, Sir, if this subject is to be a source of agitation in case we act upon it, will it be less a source of agitation if you omit this provision from the Constitution? I appeal to gentlemen to judge for themselves. It requires no spirit of prophecy to say, that from one quarter or another—I make no invidious distinction—the objection will come, that your common schools have not sufficient of the religious element in them, or that other sects are endeavoring to infuse into the minds of the scholars the doctrines and tenets of their particular faith; and the consequence may be a division of the school moneys, and the subversion of our glorious system for the education of all through the agency of free and common schools, because you have not a constitutional provision to prevent agitation on the subject.

Sir, a word more respecting the origin of this resolution. The subject came up in the ordinary action of the Convention, through a motion to refer it, and the Report of a Committee. Prior to that Report, and before I was aware that any motion had been made, I had drawn a resolution with a view of offering it. When objection was made to the resolution reported by the Committee, I showed the one I had drawn to the gentleman from Natick, (Mr. Wilson,) who, it will be recollected, expressed his approbation of it to the Convention, and his desire that I would offer it, which, however, I could not do at that time, because an amendment was then pending; but it was read for the information of the Convention. Before there was any opportunity to move it, the Report and resolution of the Committee was laid upon the table. An attempt, by the chairman of the Committee, (Mr. Briggs,) to have it taken up, failed; after which, having slightly altered the phraseology, and at the suggestion of the gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Blagden,) added the last clause—all which, in my view, in no way changes its effect—I introduced it, and it was printed. I have not time to state the farther history of it, nor is it necessary. It has already been stated.

The gentleman from Lowell says the proposition is sectarian in its purposes. Let him read it, and see if it is or not.

[Here the President's hammer announced the expiration of the time allotted for a speech.]

Mr. PARKER. I renew the motion for the previous question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word by way of personal explanation.

Mr. PARKER. I cannot withdraw the motion, because I promised the gentleman from Weymouth that I would renew it at the close of my remarks.

Mr. BUTLER. I shall be obliged, then, to ask permission of the Convention to say a few words.

Mr. THOMAS, of Weymouth. I consent that the motion for the previous question shall be withdrawn.

Mr. PARKER. Then I withdraw it.

Mr. BUTLER. I shall not trespass long upon the time of the Convention. Though I may have felt it to be a duty to speak frequently, yet it cannot be said that I have troubled the Convention with long speeches.

The gentleman from Cambridge, Sir, seems to have worked himself into a considerable degree of indignation upon this question, because he seemed to think that I had commented too freely upon his personal action in this matter. I referred to it so far as to say that the resolution had been drawn with all the skill of an astute lawyer, in a manner to do no discredit to the legal adviser of the institution with which he is connected at Cambridge. And I now call the attention of the Convention to the fact, that, although he stood upon the floor for fifteen minutes, he has not disclaimed the fact, and has not disproved a word that I have said. He has not attempted to show that his resolution is intended to prevent sectarianism. How, then, does it appear that I have imputed wrong motives to the gentleman? I say, again, that, in my judgment, this is a Harvard College resolution.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not in order for the gentleman to characterize the resolution in that manner.

Mr. PARKER. I rise for the purpose of making a disclaimer.

The PRESIDENT. Does the gentleman from Lowell yield the floor?

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman refused to withdraw the previous question to permit me to speak, and I do not feel at liberty now to yield my right.

Mr. PARKER. If a disclaimer is necessary, I desire to say, that so far as I recollect, I never exchanged a word with any one connected with Harvard College, on the subject of the resolution which I introduced, except a student in the Law School, for a moment, who spoke of the importance of the subject, and my associate professor in that department, to whom I believe I mentioned that I intended to introduce one. No suggestion was made to me respecting my introducing, or supporting anything of the kind. I acted solely upon my own personal view of the matter, and

Friday,]

SECTARIAN SCHOOLS, &c. — BUTLER — WHITE — HALLETT — DANA — CHAPIN — TRAIN.

[July 29th.

Harvard College, or the interests of Harvard College, were not in my thoughts in connection with it.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to say in regard to the interpretation to be given to the resolution, gentlemen may put such construction upon it as they please, but they are not at liberty to arraign the motives of the mover.

Mr. BUTLER. I never arraign the motives of any man without cause.

Now, Sir, a word in reference to the gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Crowninshield,) who has let the cat out of the bag completely. He says if gentlemen expect to get Catholic votes by such a movement as this, they are mistaken. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. He says, if you think to save the Constitution in this way you will be disappointed, that the Catholics will be against you nevertheless. The resolution was characterized by the gentleman as an intended attack on the Catholic population, and, says he, they are not to be deceived by such a bait as this. Now it is very evident what is at the bottom of all this, when we hear gentlemen threatening to procure votes against the Constitution. Let gentlemen not misunderstand its significance.

Mr. PERKINS, of Malden, moved the previous question.

Mr. WHITE, of Quincy. I hope the previous question will not be sustained. The gentleman from Boston has made remarks concerning the reconsideration, which, it seems to me, ought to be replied to and corrected. I made the motion to reconsider, and should like to have an opportunity to explain the circumstances which led me to make that motion.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be now put.

The question being on the motion to reconsider, a division was called for.

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham, demanded the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been refused.

Mr. HALLETT. Are we not entitled to have the yeas and nays as a verification of the vote?

The PRESIDENT. The motion for the yeas and nays having been rejected, it is not competent to renew the same motion.

Mr. HALLETT. I rise to a point of order. I understand the Chair to say that the yeas and nays have, at some stage of this question, been called, and have been refused.

The PRESIDENT. Such is the case.

Mr. HALLETT. According to a former ruling of the Chair, as I understand, there are two purposes to which the yeas and nays apply. One is, to ascertain the sentiment of the House upon a given question, and the other is, as a verification of the vote upon a question. The question has now been put upon the motion to reconsider. While the House was dividing, and before the President declared what the vote was, I rose and asked for the yeas and nays as a verification of the vote. The Convention certainly have this right. It is an entirely distinct purpose from that for which they were originally called. I ask if such has not been the decision of the Chair?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has made no such decision. There is but one purpose, that is, to determine the result. The difficulty is, the yeas and nays have been moved and refused.

Mr. HALLETT. If the Chair holds it is not in order to call for the yeas and nays at this time, it is a very different ruling from that which the Chair has made on a former occasion.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has never ruled as the gentleman states.

Mr. BUTLER. I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the yeas and nays were refused.

The PRESIDENT. It is too late for such a motion.

The question was then taken on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolve on the subject of sectarian schools was passed, and upon a division, there were—yeas, 87; noes, 183.

So the motion to reconsider did not prevail.

Imprisonment for Debt.

The PRESIDENT. The next matter on the Orders of the Day is the motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolve on the subject of imprisonment for debt was passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. I wish to make an inquiry. I believe this resolve was never before the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILSON, of Natick. I understand there is a Report made by the Judiciary Committee, on a very important matter, which the Committee on Revision need to-night. I therefore move that the Orders of the Day be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Tenure of Office.

On motion of Mr. DANA, for Manchester, the Convention took up for consideration the Report from the Committee on the Judiciary, respecting the tenure of office.

The Report was read, as follows:—

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

In Convention, July 28, 1853.

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the order of July 26th, 1853, have considered the same, and report the accompanying resolves.

MARCUS MORTON, Chairman.

1. Resolved, That persons holding office by election or appointment under the present Constitution, shall continue to discharge the duties thereof until their term of office shall expire, or officers authorized to perform their duties, or any part thereof, shall be elected and qualified, pursuant to the provisions of this amended Constitution; when all powers not reserved to them by the provisions of this amended Constitution shall cease: provided, however, that Justices of the Peace, Justices of the Peace and of the Quorum, and Commissioners of Insolvency, shall be authorized to finish and complete all proceedings pending before them at the time when their powers and duties shall cease, or be altered as aforesaid.

2. Resolved, That the legislature shall provide, from time to time, the mode in which commissions or certificates of election shall be issued to all officers elected pursuant to the Constitution, except in case where provision shall be made therein.

3. Resolved, That the Governor, by and with the consent of the Council, may at any time for cause shown, remove from office, Clerks of Courts, Commissioners of Insolvency, Judges and Registers of Probate, District-Attorneys, Registers of Deeds, County Treasurers, County Commissioners, Sheriffs, Trial Justices, and Justices of Police Courts: provided, however, a copy of the charges upon which said removal is made, shall be furnished to the party to be removed, and a reasonable opportunity given him for defence.

4. Resolved, That whenever a vacancy shall occur in any elective office, provided for in this Constitution, except that of Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Councillor, Senator, member of the House of Representatives, and Town and City officers, the Governor for the time being, by and with the advice and consent of the Council, may appoint some suitable person to fill such vacancy, until the next annual election, when the same shall be filled by a new election, in the manner to be provided by law: provided, however, Trial Justices shall not be deemed to be town officers for this purpose.

5. Resolved, That all elections provided to be had under this amended Constitution, shall, unless otherwise provided, be first held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November, A. D. 1854.

Mr. DANA moved to amend the third resolution, by striking out the proviso.

Mr. DANA. I wish to say, Sir, that I have submitted this amendment to two gentlemen of the Judiciary Committee, and they approved of it. I have not been able to find the other members of the Committee, or I would have consulted them also. I will simply state to the house the purport of the proposition. It provides that clerks of courts, sheriffs, &c., shall be elected for three years, the governor having the power of removal, "provided", that a copy of the charges upon which said removal is made, shall be furnished to the party to be removed, and a reasonable opportunity given him for defence."

Now, it may happen that a sheriff may fall into habits of intemperance; or in times of civil commotion he may have gone over to the enemy; he may be guilty of treason; yet nobody can touch him. The clerk of a court may become involved in some fraudulent transaction, or may commit a misdemeanor; he may become treacherous, and refuse to deliver up papers. Now, I want to provide that the governor shall have power to remove these officers for causes such as these. The difficulty, as the matter now stands, would be, that they could not be removed without a hearing, an examination of the charges against them, and such formalities as might not be consistent with the public exigencies. It is simply provided in this amendment that the governor shall have the power, if the exigencies of the case require it, to suspend these officers, and make a temporary appointment to hold only until an examination can be had, and the charges verified or disproved. That is the whole of it. The governor must, in all cases, enter the cause of removal upon the record, and the party must be heard, and he cannot be removed without the consent of the council. And it must be remembered they are all elective officers. There is no danger of the governor and council abusing the power. But it is certain that such a power should exist somewhere, especially in the case of sheriffs.

Mr. CHAPIN, of Worcester. I rise to say that I am entirely satisfied with the amendment which the gentleman has proposed, so far as the matter of removal is concerned. I suppose no governor would undertake to remove an elective officer unless for sufficient cause. Therefore, it seems to me that the article is sufficiently guarded in the amendment, and the interests of the Commonwealth will be thereby the better protected.

Mr. TRAIN, of Framingham. My attention has been directed to this matter only since the gentleman has called it up; but it seems to me we ought to define the causes for which the governor and council may remove an officer. As it is, the governor, with the advice of the council, may remove an officer for any cause. If the governor chooses to find fault with me for being only five feet and a half in height, he may remove me from an office to which I have been elected by the people. Now, I do not believe the Convention desire to intrust such power in the hands of the governor and council. And for the purpose of reaching such cases, there is a provision in the Constitution of the State of New York, which covers the whole ground. But not to detain the Convention, I will move to strike out the words "cause shown," and insert the words "disability, incapacity, or malfeasance in office."

Friday,]

TENURE OF OFFICE, &c. — HALLETT — HOPKINSON — BUTLER — SCHOULER — BIRD.

[July 29th.]

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman's amendment will be in order after this is disposed of. The present proposition is to strike from the third resolve the proviso which is in these words: "provided, however, a copy of the charges upon which said removal is made, shall be furnished to the party to be removed, and a reasonable opportunity given him for defence."

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I think the provision goes far enough as it is. The amendment would give a most extraordinary power to the governor and council. Give them the power of removal, if you please, but this gives the governor the power, whenever he chooses to charge a man with disability, to immediately suspend him from office; and when an examination is had, if it be had at all, it may turn out that the charge is utterly groundless and malicious. I question very much the propriety of placing this power in the hands of the executive. I am willing that the governor should have the power of appointment to fill a vacancy, but I am not quite prepared to go so far as to give him the power of removal, in the case of an elective officer, at his mere will and pleasure. I should greatly prefer the amendment of the gentleman from Framingham. The moment an officer is elected, if the governor does not like him, he has only to make out a specification of charges against him, and from that moment the officer is suspended from the discharge of the duties of the office to which he has been elected; and the governor then fills the office with a man of his own choosing.

Mr. BATES, of Plymouth. I rise for the purpose of inquiring whether this is the final stage of these resolves?

The PRESIDENT. It is not. The question will be on ordering the resolves to a second reading, after the proposed amendments shall have been disposed of.

Mr. HOPKINSON, of Boston. The matter presents itself to my mind very much as it is viewed by the gentleman for Wilbraham. At present, such officers could not be removed, except by act of the legislature, to be adopted by a vote of two-thirds. It appears to me we should not give to the governor and council a power so much greater than the legislature has. I think there ought to be not only a specification of charges, but a substantiation of them, before the power of removal should be exercised. The man elected to an office, might be obnoxious to the governor for the time being; and, to get rid of him, nothing more would be requisite than the mere will of the governor and council. There should be some such restriction as is contained in the Constitution of the State of New York. It should not be a mere matter of discretion with the governor, whether a man who has been elected, shall retain his office or not. A mere accusation, it seems to me, is not a sufficient reason for removing a man from office.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. I merely wish to say, that if gentlemen will look at this matter for a moment in the light in which I view it, I think they will not find so much difficulty as they seem to apprehend. I think they will see that there can be no great danger of this power being abused. All these officers, viz.: clerks of courts, commissioners of insolvency, judges and registers of probate, district-attorneys, registers of deeds, county treasurers, county commissioners, sheriffs, trial justices, and justices of police courts, are to be elected triennially, and when a vacancy occurs, an election to fill such vacancy will take place at the next annual election; so that the power of the governor to make a temporary appointment, would only extend to the time of the next annual election, perhaps six or nine months at the farthest. There would be but little gained by a temporary appointment for a period so limited; and the governor would scarcely attempt to make use of the power, therefore, for political purposes. It would hardly pay. Now, take the case of—

The PRESIDENT. The attention of the Chair is called to the fact, that the resolves have never been committed to the Committee of the Whole. It will be necessary that they be so committed, or else that the rule be suspended.

Mr. BIRD, of Walpole. I move that the rule be suspended.

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham. Are you going to suspend the rule to pass these resolves?

Mr. BIRD. No; only to order them to a second reading.

The question upon the motion to suspend the rule being put, a division was asked for, and upon a count, it appeared there was not a quorum voting.

Mr. CROWNINSHIELD, of Boston, moved that the Convention adjourn. A division was called for, and a count being had, there were—ayes, 23; noes, 76. The President voted in the negative, making a quorum; and the Convention refused to adjourn.

The question was then taken on the motion to suspend the rule, and—by ayes, 95; noes, 6—it was decided in the affirmative.

The question recurred on the amendment moved by the gentleman for Manchester, (Mr. Dana).

Mr. HOPKINSON, of Boston. I rise only for the purpose of making a suggestion which may serve to facilitate our proceeding. It is this: As this matter now stands, not having been considered in Committee of the Whole, we are not prepared to act upon it, and this is not its final stage. I therefore suggest that the amendment be withdrawn at this time, and that the resolves be passed to their second reading, and to-morrow, when they come up, we shall be ready to consider the amendment, and act upon it as well as upon the final passage of the resolves.

Mr. DANA, in accordance with the suggestion made, by the gentleman from Boston, withdrew his amendment, and

The resolves were ordered to a second reading.

Orders of the Day.

On motion of Mr. TRAIN, of Framingham, the Convention resumed the consideration of the Orders of the Day. The next item on the Orders being the motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolve was passed in relation to Imprisonment for Debt.

Mr. SCHOULER, of Boston, moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Debates and Proceedings.

The following Reports from the Committee on Reporting and Printing were taken up, and, under a suspension of the rules, read twice and concurred in.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

In Convention, July 28, 1853.

The Committee on Reporting and Printing, to whom was referred the business of superintending the Reporting and Publication of the Debates and Proceedings of the Convention, ask leave to report the following resolutions.

For the Committee,

M. BATES, JR., Chairman.

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Reporting and Printing be authorized, under the direction and sanction of said Committee, to superintend the Reporting, Indexing, Printing and Publication of the Debates and Proceedings of the Convention, until the same are completed, and that he be paid therefor the sum of four dollars per day, and travel.

Resolved, That said Committee be authorized to pay to the Secretary of the Commonwealth such expenses, not exceeding six hundred dollars, as may have been incurred for extra services performed by order of this Convention, and that the Order of May 18th, be so far altered as that said Committee shall have the direction of all matters relative to the sale or distribution of the Reports and Proceedings of this Convention.

Resolved, That a copy of the Debates and Proceedings of this Convention, when completed, be furnished by the Committee to each of the Reporters to the Convention.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

In Convention, July 28, 1853.

The Committee on Reporting and Printing, to whom was referred the order of July 21st relative to appending to the published Debates, "Poole's Statistical View of the Members," and the "pay for the travel and attendance of members," have considered the same, and report, that it is inexpedient for the Convention to take any action thereon.

For the Committee,

M. BATES, JR., Chairman.

Journal of Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BIRD, of Walpole, from the Committee on the Preservation of the Records, submitted a Report, authorizing James T. Robinson, Esq., one of the Secretaries of the Convention, to make up the Journal of the Proceedings in Committee of the Whole, and to prepare an Index for the same, at the same rate of compensation as that allowed for the Journal of the Convention and Index to the same.

The Report was adopted.

Suspension of a Rule.

Some conversation ensued, respecting an informality in the proceedings relating to the resolve on the subject of imprisonment for debt, which informality was subsequently remedied by the suspension of the rule which requires all proposi-

Saturday,]

TENURE OF OFFICE. — WALKER — DANA — DAVIS — TRAIN — LORD.

[July 30th.

tions for amending the Constitution, to be considered in Committee of the Whole, before they are debated and finally acted upon in Convention, so far as relates to that particular subject.

On motion by Mr. WOOD, of Fitchburg, the Convention then, at half past seven o'clock, adjourned until to-morrow at nine o'clock, A. M.

SATURDAY, July 30, 1853.

The Convention assembled pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by the President, at nine o'clock.

Prayer by the Chaplain.

The journal of yesterday was read.

Superintendence of Printing the Debates.

The resolution reported from the Committee on Reporting and Printing, in relation to the superintendence of the printing of the Debates, was read and adopted.

The Amended Constitution.

On motion by Mr. WALKER, of North Brookfield, it was ordered, that one hundred thousand copies of the Amended Constitution be printed for distribution, and that a copy of the same be sent to every family in the Commonwealth.

On motion by Mr. DANA, for Manchester, the Convention proceeded to the consideration of the Orders of the Day, the first item being the resolves reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, in relation to the Tenure of Office.

The question being upon their final passage.

They were read, as follows:—

1. Resolved, That persons holding office by election or appointment under the present Constitution, shall continue to discharge the duties thereof until their term of office shall expire, or officers authorized to perform their duties, or any part thereof, shall be elected and qualified, pursuant to the provisions of this amended Constitution; when all powers not reserved to them by the provisions of this amended Constitution shall cease: provided, however, that Justices of the Peace, Justices of the Peace and of the Quorum, and Commissioners of Insolvency, shall be authorized to finish and complete all proceedings pending before them at the time, when their powers and duties shall cease, or be altered as aforesaid.

2. Resolved, That the Legislature shall provide, from time to time, the mode in which commissions or certificates of election shall be issued to all officers elected pursuant to the Constitution, except in case where provision shall be made therein.

3. Resolved, That the Governor, by and with the consent of the Council, may at any time for cause shown, remove from office, Clerks of Courts, Commissioners of Insolvency, Judges and Registers of Probate, District-Attorneys, Registers of Deeds, County Treasurers, County Commissioners, Sheriffs, Trial Justices, and Justices of Police Courts: provided, however, a copy of the charges upon which said removal is made, shall be furnished to the party to be removed, and a reasonable opportunity given him for defence.

4. Resolved, That whenever a vacancy shall occur in any elective office provided for in this Constitution, except that of Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Councillor, Senator, member of the House of Representatives, and Town and

City officers, the Governor for the time being, by and with the advice and consent of the Council, may appoint some suitable person to fill such vacancy until the next annual election, when the same shall be filled by a new election, in the manner to be provided by law: provided, however, Trial Justices shall not be deemed to be town officers for this purpose.

5. Resolved, That all elections provided to be had under this amended Constitution shall, unless otherwise provided, be first held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November, A. D. 1854.

Mr. DANA, for Manchester, moved to amend the third resolve, by striking out all after the word "provided," and inserting the following:—

That the cause be entered upon the records of the Council, and a copy thereof be furnished to the party to be removed, and a reasonable opportunity be given him for defence. And the Governor may at any time, if the public exigency demand it, either before or after such entry and notice, suspend any of said officers, and appoint substitutes who shall hold office until the final action upon the question of removal.

Mr. DANA. The object of this third resolve is, to enable the governor to remove and appoint a substitute in the place of an officer who shall become insane, or otherwise incompetent to discharge the duties of the office, or who shall become unfaithful to the government in a time of emergency. Formerly, the governor had the power of removal in all cases, and of making appointments, but you have incorporated into the new Constitution a provision by which all these officers mentioned in the third section, are to be elected by the people for three years, and the governor has no power of removal or suspension in regard to them, whatever. Accordingly, if a sheriff should become insane, or incompetent, or unfaithful, he could still hold his office for three years, in defiance of the Commonwealth, and to the great injury of the public interest. Every one must agree that the governor should have the power of removal in such cases; the only question is, how it should be exercised. The Committee originally proposed that the governor should remove the officer, but that he should first specify the charges against him, and enter them upon the records, and give him notice thereof, that he might have an opportunity for defence. The amendment proposes, in addition to that, that the governor shall have power, during the hearing of the charges, to suspend the officer, and make a temporary appointment to fill his place. The case may easily be conceived, of a sheriff, or a clerk of a court, or other incumbent of an important office, becoming insane or otherwise incapacitated, or they may prove unfaithful, traitorous in time of insurrection, or invasion; they may have gone over to the enemy, and yet, if the governor has not this power of removal and appointment ad interim, the business of the office must be suspended while the case is being investigated, and all that time there would be no sheriff, or no clerk, as the case might be. It is absolutely necessary to the carrying on of the government, that this power should exist. I have consulted with the members of the Committee on the Judiciary, and they are in favor of the amendment, as are also the Committee on Revision. I hope it will be adopted without any objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of Worcester. 'As I understand the matter, the governor will have the power, if this amendment be adopted, to supersede an election by the people, by an appointment of his own, whenever he thinks proper to do so.

Mr. DANA. If the gentleman will permit me, I ought to have said also, that there is a provision which directs that, in case of a vacancy occurring in an office which is elective for the term of three years, it shall be filled by an election at the next annual election, so that if the governor remove an officer, and appoint another in his place, such appointment can only hold good, under any circumstances, until the next annual election. Gentlemen will perceive, then, that the governor could have very little inducement for making a removal and appointment unless the cause contemplated by the Constitution actually existed. And the whole matter must become a matter of record. The governor, then, would not be very likely to make a removal without sufficient cause, when all the circumstances must become a matter of public notoriety.

Mr. TRAIN, of Framingham. If I rightly understood the effect of the amendment offered by my friend over the way, I suppose the object sought to be attained is one which every one will acknowledge is a proper one to be accomplished. But if I understand the effect of it, as offered by the gentleman for Manchester, (Mr. Dana,) it will be to place it in the power of the executive, the day after a sheriff, or clerk of a court was elected by the people, to suspend one of these officers, to hold him suspended, and to keep the office filled by his own appointment during the entire three years. For it is left at the option of the governor and council to try him or not, as they please. Now, suppose the clerk of a court refuses to enter up a judgment to suit me, and I go to the governor and file a charge against that clerk, that he did not enter up a judgment as I wanted him to. Thereupon he is suspended by the governor until the council try him, and they will try him just when they get ready; but in the mean time, the office is filled by the governor. I would not give the governor any such power. I think if there is a vacancy in the office of clerk of a court, it should be filled by the court itself, but it is too late to discuss that now.

Mr. DANA. I will remark that I wish the Convention had provided that vacancies occurring in the offices of the clerks of the courts, should be filled by the courts themselves. But they have otherwise provided.

Mr. LORD, of Salem. I desire to ask, as a matter of order, whether this precise resolution has not been once acted upon and rejected, by the Convention?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not. It is, however, too late to raise the question of order now. The resolves have been received, read a second time, and the question is on their final passage.

Mr. LORD. I do know how that may be, for I was not present a portion of the time yesterday afternoon, but just such a proposition was reported by the gentleman from Lenox, (Mr. Bishop,) from the Committee of which he is chairman. It provided that the governor should have power to remove all those officers which are mentioned in the resolve now before us. That resolution was rejected, by an almost unanimous vote of the Convention, and I submit that this resolution could not regularly have been introduced. If,

Saturday,]

TENURE OF OFFICE. — DANA — LORD — CHAPIN — MORTON — PARSONS.

[July 30th.]

however, it has passed to a stage where the point of order cannot be made upon it, I have nothing to say.

Mr. DANA, for Manchester. I will remark to the gentleman from Salem, that this is quite a different provision from that reported by the gentleman from Lenox, (Mr. Bishop). That gave to the governor the unqualified power of removal. This gives the governor, by and with the advice of the council, the power to remove them upon certain conditions.

Mr. LORD. The resolution before the Convention, to which I have reference, is the following:—

3. Resolved, That the Governor, by and with the consent of the Council, may at any time, for cause shown, remove from office, Clerks of Courts, Commissioners of Insolvency, Judges and Registers of Probate, District-Attorneys, Registers of Deeds, County Treasurers, County Commissioners, Sheriffs, Trial Justices, and Justices of Police Courts: provided, however, a copy of the charges upon which said removal is made, shall be furnished to the party to be removed, and a reasonable opportunity given him for defence.

In document No. 104, you will find reported from the Committee on the Secretary, Treasurer, &c., the following:—

2. Resolved, That it is expedient so to amend the Constitution, that the Governor may remove any officer in the former resolves of this Committee mentioned, within the term for which he shall have been elected, giving such officer a copy of the charges against him, and an opportunity of being heard in his defence.

The PRESIDENT. The resolves are not the same. The gentleman will find certain officers mentioned in one resolution that are not mentioned in the other.

Mr. LORD. Certain officers are named in one of the resolves, and the other refers to former resolves, where the same officers are named.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that they are not the same resolves, and that they are in order.

Mr. CHAPIN, of Worcester. The resolve to which the gentleman from Salem refers, contained in document No. 104, was committed, along with others, to the Select Committee, of which the gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Stevenson,) was chairman. That Committee struck it out in their Report. I submit, therefore, that the Convention has not taken any action upon it, which, by the rules of order, would prevent it from being introduced again.

Mr. LORD. If it is too late to raise the point of order, of course I have nothing to say. I however desire to say a word upon the amendment of the gentleman for Manchester, (Mr. Dana). If I understand the effect of that amendment, it is this: Whenever anybody sees fit to make a charge against an officer they do not like, and who is of different politics from the governor then in office, they thereupon present their charge to the governor, and the governor, thereupon, enters the charge upon record, suspends that officer, and appoints somebody else in his place. I want to know if that is not the meaning of this resolve? Has not the governor the power—as soon as one of these officers, elected by the people, comes into office, if anybody sees fit to object to him—to place that objection upon the record, and then suspend that officer just as long as he pleases?

A MEMBER. Only in cases of insanity.

Mr. LORD. If it is only in cases of insanity, I will go for it. Still, there is a class of unhealthy politicians who are considered insane, and that may be considered good reason, perhaps, for suspending them.

Now, I submit, Mr. President, that if the Convention understand this resolve, or this amendment, they will not pass them. It is not necessary to make an argument against them. It is only necessary for the Convention to understand their effect, to reject them. But, Sir, I will not take up the time of the Convention upon the subject.

Mr. DANA. I wish the Convention to understand this matter. The governor has always had the power to remove these officers for cause shown. We only make the same provision with regard to sheriffs, clerks of courts, &c., which has been made before. Indeed, we place restrictions upon the power of removal, which are not contained in the present Constitution.

Mr. LORD. My objection is not that there is a power of removal. The governor has heretofore had an unlimited power to remove the officers of his own appointment, and, I think it is perfectly proper that he should have that power; but now it is proposed to give him the power to remove officers appointed by the people. It is that to which I object.

Mr. DANA. Does the gentleman say the governor ought not to have the power to suspend these officers?

Mr. LORD. I think the governor ought not to have power to remove or suspend an officer the people have elected.

Mr. DANA. But suppose he is insane?

Mr. LORD. I would provide a remedy.

Mr. DANA. What is it?

Mr. LORD. I would not leave it to the governor to remove him.

Mr. DANA. I do not think the objection holds good at all. The governor has always held that power. But this limits it. The governor and council are not to remove except for cause shown, and that cause must be noted upon the records of the council. Notice must be given to the party himself, and he has the right to be heard in his own defence. Now, I put it to the good sense of gentlemen, whether it is at all probable that the governor would remove, without good cause, an officer whom the people had chosen, on written charges, with published proceedings? The people have the right to fill the vacancy every year. The appointee of the governor can hold only until the next general election. Now, Sir, while the governor must give notice to the officer himself, of the charges against him, and place the same upon record, I ask if he would dare to remove an officer the people have chosen, except for good cause? But if gentlemen are much afraid to trust the governor, I am perfectly willing the causes for which he shall be removed shall be specified in the resolve.

I move, therefore, to strike out in the second line the words "cause shown," and to insert the words, "incapacity, misconduct, or maladministration in office," so that the clause will read:—

Resolved, That the Governor, by and with the consent of the Council, may at any time, for incapacity, misconduct, or maladministration in office, remove from office, &c.

Mr. MORTON, of Taunton. The Committee on the Judiciary gave some considerable attention to this subject, and they came to the result which is stated in this resolve. It may be open to objections—perhaps sound ones, certainly it is open to plausible ones. But, I think it must be obvious to every one, that some provision is necessary to provide for the removal of these officers. Here are a large number of officers chosen by the people. Some of them may become incompetent to perform their duties. There may be cause from insanity. There may be cause from absence from the Commonwealth. There may be cause from unfaithfulness and intentional violation of duty; and the public good seems to require that you should have somebody to act in this matter. It seems almost a matter of necessity that some of these officers should be on duty all the time. For instance, if the clerk of your courts, your sheriff, your register of deeds, or your register of probate, from any cause become unable to perform their duties, it seems almost indispensable that somebody should be authorized to displace him, and to appoint some one else to perform his duties. And, although I approve highly of the vigilance which seems to be shown in guarding the power you confer upon individuals, and especially in cases of removal, yet I do not believe that in cases of this kind there is any great danger of abuse. So long as the governor himself is elected by the people, and is required to place upon record the causes for which he removes an officer, I do not believe there is any great danger of his removing, without sufficient cause, officers who are chosen by the people.

I do not believe it is wise to define precisely the cause or the act for which an officer shall be removed. If we do, we shall be almost sure to omit certain causes for which they ought to be removed, and thereby exclude them. I think we ought to have the matter discretionary as much as possible. I do not know how we can limit or classify the causes for which an officer shall be removed, without involving ourselves in difficulty. The learned and astute gentleman for Manchester, (Mr. Dana,) is as competent as any one to make such a classification; and he has provided, among other things, incapacity, as a cause of removal. Now, we shall perhaps never have an election where one party will not charge the candidate of the other party with incapacity. They will charge that he is incompetent to perform his duty, and upon this ground the governor would have the power to turn him out of office. I repeat, I like vigilance in guarding the power which you confer upon individuals; but, it seems to me, if you undertake to limit the causes for which these officers may be turned out of office, you will not make the power any more safe from abuse, but, on the contrary, if there is danger, you make it more dangerous.

Mr. PARSONS, of Lawrence. There is a portion of the amendment to which I am entirely opposed, since we have made a portion of the officers elective, to whom this resolution is to apply. I have no great objection to the officers being elected; but since this Convention has thought proper, by a large majority, to make certain officers elective who have formerly been appointed by the governor, and have left that matter entirely to the people, I think it would ill become us to put in that amendment, especially that part of the amendment which says that when an officer becomes incompetent, and is not capacitated to discharge the duties for which he was elected, he may be suspended. I say, it will give an opportunity throughout this State, for various political parties to get up petitions in towns, counties, or districts, signed by hundreds, to be brought before the governor and create a disturbance, and interfere with the rights of the people. Now, what will that word "incapacity" mean. It means nothing more than this: that when it becomes necessary to send a petition to the governor, it will be argued by those persons who represent the petitioners, that that person is incapable; that he is incapable in a thousand different ways, not from being insane, or from malfeasance in office, but in an intellectual view, to perform the duties for which he was elected. I say the governor has nothing to do with it; and, to my mind, it is highly improper that such an amendment should be passed, for we have intrusted their election to the people, who are to judge whether a man is capable to perform the duties for which he is elected. Will not the people know the man for whom they vote? I want to know if they are not the best judges. Most assuredly they are the best judges. They have the sole right to judge, and as has been argued for weeks past, with regard to vested rights of the people, I will say, that so far as the vested rights of the people are concerned, I am not one of the sticklers for their rights in Massachusetts. I have no fear with regard to their rights. I have always, since I have been a voter, especially in the State of Massachusetts, thought that the people are capable of taking care of themselves, and of their own rights, and that they will do it. But, I say, we are not the judges whether a man is capable of performing the duties of an office to which the people have chosen to elect him. I hope we shall not make a farce of this matter, since we have said that it is not proper to give to the people the right to elect judicial officers. This proviso, if adopted, will only make dissension which will array hostile parties against each other, by filing petitions on different sides, and they can bring an array against almost any man.

Saturday,]

TENURE OF OFFICE. — WALKER — KEYES — BUTLER — DAVIS — HALE.

[July 30th.

I want to ask the reformers in this Convention if they intend to oppose our taking these officers from the farmers, when we come to elect them by the people, or from any other class of people from whom we may choose to take them. I say that petitions may be sent in with regard to district and county officers which may require weeks in order to decide whether the man who has been elected by the people is competent, intellectually or morally, for holding the office to which he has been elected. I hope the resolution will not pass.

Mr. WALKER, of North Brookfield. I am sure that the resolution, as it has been amended, must commend itself to the good sense of the Convention. It is very evident to my mind that this power should be deposited somewhere; and in placing it in the hands of the governor, with these restrictions, there is no danger. I hope it will be sustained. It is very evident that nothing would be more unpopular or unwise, than for a governor to remove a man who had been elected by the people by a large majority. The very fact that he had been removed would insure his reelection. I cannot see the least danger to be apprehended in intrusting the governor with this duty.

Mr. KEYES, for Abington. It may appear a little immodest that I should imagine that I could do anything to extricate ourselves from this state of confusion; but if the gentleman for Manchester will listen to me, I will try. I will start in the first place, by saying, that I think that the amendment with regard to cause being shown, &c., is very proper, but that the latter part of the amendment is unnecessary. I am in favor of having a power of removal somewhere. But the reason for appointing some one in the place of the person removed, I think unnecessary. If the crime charged against an officer is of an extraordinary character, so that it unfits him at once for the discharge of the duties of his office, the governor and council can discharge him at once. Therefore there is no danger in having this stand as it does now, that a copy of the charges shall be furnished to the party, so as to give a reasonable opportunity for a defence.

Now if a man dies, and a vacancy occurs in that way, it is provided for in the fourth resolution. The time to be occupied in deciding a case need not be longer than in the case of filling a vacancy when a man dies, even if you give a copy of the charges and allow the accused to appear. And if the case is so extraordinary, and the person is so very guilty that he should not hold his office one hour, the governor and council can settle it in an hour; and therefore a vacancy will then occur. The officer being removed, there is a provision in the fourth resolution for filling that vacancy.

Now let us look at the character of these offices and see how important it is that in every minute of time there should be some one in office. Take the office of sheriff for example. Suppose he dies, or is taken insane suddenly; he has his deputies to perform his duties. I take it the deputy is simply a substitute for the sheriff.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. I wish to suggest to the gentleman for Abington to consider that the moment the sheriff dies, the deputies all die with him. It is just as soon as that.

Mr. KEYES. That does not affect this case at all. If there is a charge of maladministration, he is alive then and his deputies are living with him, and the duties may be performed, as they are in many cases, by the deputies themselves. The idea which I wish to convey to the Convention is, that the time required to appoint a new officer is just the same as to try him, provided the case is so desperate that there would be danger to the community to have him remain. For instance, the council can be summoned, and he must appear immediately to show whether it is a desperate case or not, and if it is an extraordinary case he can be removed at once, and then as a vacancy will have occurred, that vacancy can be filled in the manner provided for in the fourth resolution.

So in the case of a register of deeds; he always has his assistants, and it is not necessary that his own hand should make the record of the hour when it comes to his office, in order to make it legal. Therefore the difficulty is no greater than if a man were dead. It seems to me, therefore, that all the power may be given to the governor and council that need to be given for the removal, with the provision which is now here, that a copy of the charges shall be sent to the officer and he may be allowed to appear before that council. Because he may hold on still, and the prosecution can go on; and in the mean time, it is not probable he would do any more mischief; and if the case was a desperate one he could be removed at once, and the vacancy filled according to the provision of the fourth resolution.

It seems to me, the third resolution may be left to stand precisely as it is, except with regard to the amendment proposed, that for cause shown, &c. Then you have all the safety you can desire. There should be some place of power somewhere, to remove an officer, and there is no place for it better than with the governor and council themselves. But they are elected annually, and they would not discharge a man elected by the people without sufficient cause. Now, to do away with that objection of putting the whole power into the hands of the governor to suspend him and appoint a new one, these charges against an officer can be preferred against him and a copy given, and the question settled as soon as the council can be called together. If it is such a doubtful case that the man is not so great a rascal, then the order may rest there for a while. It strikes me that this will avoid all difficulties, and that the first amendment of the gentleman for Manchester settles the whole thing.

The question was then taken on each clause of the amendment separately, and they were both adopted.

The question was then taken on the final passage of the resolves, as amended, and they were passed.

Question of Order.

Mr. DAVIS, of Plymouth. I wish to inquire whether it will be in order to offer a resolution now.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman can submit a resolution by leave of the Convention.

Mr. DAVIS. There was an order, in the early part of the session, offered by the gentleman from Natick, which was referred to the Committee on appointing the governor by the legislature. By some mishap, the Committee have not acted upon it, or if they have acted it has not been put into the Orders of the Day. I wish to offer a resolution as a substitute for the order sent the Committee by the gentleman from Natick.

Resolved, That the Constitution be so amended as to provide that no member of the Senate or the House of Representatives, who shall have taken his seat therein, shall, during the year for which he was elected, be appointed by the Governor to any office, commission, or trust, which shall have been created, or the emoluments of which shall have been increased by the Legislature, during said year.

I ask leave to offer this resolution, because I suppose it will not create any debate, and so far as I can learn, it is unanimously the opinion of the members of the Committee that such a resolution should be inserted in the Constitution. We have a provision of this kind in the Constitution of the United States, and a similar provision has been adopted by the Convention with regard to the Council.

Mr. HALE, of Bridgewater. Before this resolution is received, I wish to state that that order to which the gentleman has referred, was considered by the Committee, and, I believe, it was almost the unanimous opinion of the Committee, that no action was necessary on the part of the Convention. I believe the gentleman from Plymouth was present at one meeting when it was considered expedient to have such a resolution; but at a subsequent meeting, when he was not present, it was decided inexpedient.

Saturday,]

TERMS OF OFFICE.—HUNTINGTON—MORTON—HALE—BUTLER—STEVENSON—OLIVER.

[July 30th.]

The PRESIDENT. If the Chair understands the gentleman from Plymouth correctly, this subject has been referred to a Select Committee of the Convention. It is not, therefore, in order. The proper order will be for the gentleman from Plymouth to make a motion that the Committee be instructed to report at a given time.

Mr. MORTON, of Northampton. It seems to me it is altogether too late to introduce a proposition of that character. It seems that the subject has been referred to a Committee, and that there is a division of opinion in that Committee. Owing, therefore, to the lateness of the session, and the probability that the subject must create a debate, I move that the subject be laid on the table.

Mr. WHITNEY, of Boylston. I hope that motion will prevail. I want to leave a little something for the next Constitutional Convention to do. I hope that we shall not do everything at this time.

The question being then put on the motion to lay upon the table, it was agreed to.

* Terms of Office.

Mr. MORTON, of Taunton. I wish to inquire whether the resolves from the Judiciary Committee have been finally passed. I have been obliged to be absent for a few moments.

The PRESIDENT. They have been passed.

Mr. MORTON. Then, Mr. President, I feel it to be my duty to move a reconsideration of that vote, for a special purpose, which I will state; and if the purpose which I am about to state, meets the approbation of the Convention, they will doubtless reconsider the vote by which the resolves were passed, in order that I may introduce a certain amendment, which I will read before I ask action on the motion to reconsider. It is not for the purpose of rejecting anything that has been adopted, or modifying anything, but for the purpose of introducing an additional resolve, which the Committee on the Judiciary did not feel itself authorized to do, under the special commission under which they last acted. Gentlemen of the Convention will recollect, that we have provided for the election of a great number of officers, but we have not fixed the term of those offices. We have fixed the tenure, but we have never fixed the term at which their duties shall commence. At present, some of them commence at one season of the year, and some at another. Now if they are elected in November, it seems to me that it would be better to have them commence at a uniform period to enter upon their duties. As it is now, the county commissioners enter upon the duties of their office at one period, the registers of deeds at another, and county treasurers at still another. The Committee have deemed it expedient to have the terms of all the offices commence at the same time. If this meets the approbation of the Convention, I hope they will reconsider the vote by which they passed the resolves, so that I may have an opportunity to offer an additional resolve, as an amendment, which I will now read:—

Resolved, That the terms of all elective officers provided for in this Constitution, shall commence on the first Wednesday in January next after their election.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Chair will consider the question on the final passage of the resolves as not having been put to the Convention. The Chair understands that no objection is made. The question will therefore now be on the final passage of the resolves.

Mr. MORTON. I now offer the amendment which I read to the Convention.

Mr. HALE, of Bridgewater. I want to inquire of the gentleman from Taunton how that would operate in the case of a vacancy filled by an election in the interim—whether in that case the term would have to commence on the first Wednesday in January following. Suppose the vacancy is filled in May, is the office to remain vacant until the next January before the term will commence?

Mr. MORTON. The amendment was written in some haste; but that was not the intention, at any rate. If there is any oversight in the form of the resolution, the Revising Committee will put that right.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. If I understand this matter, we have already passed a resolution that all these vacancies shall be filled at the annual election in November. If there is a vacancy occurring in the mean time, ad interim, the governor appoints some one; and of course the ad interim appointee would hold the office until the first Wednesday in the January succeeding, when the newly elected officer would assume the duties. There is no filling vacancies in May by elections, for all vacancies are to be filled at the annual election in November, in order to prevent the people from being called out too often.

Mr. STEVENSON, of Boston. I desire to make a suggestion, that it would be well to except representatives to the general court, for the reason that they may be chosen during the session of the legislature, upon precepts.

Mr. MORTON. This does not apply to vacancies. This resolve fixes the time when the terms of office shall commence. It says that the terms of all elective officers shall commence on the first Wednesday in January next after their election, and of course they hold their offices until the first Wednesday in the January following. If a vacancy occurs in the meantime, there is a provision made in another resolve how that temporary vacancy shall be supplied until the next election.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to have the resolve read again.

The resolve was accordingly read.

Mr. STEVENSON. The language of the resolve is, that the terms of all elective officers provided for in this Constitution, shall commence on the first Wednesday in January next after their election. Now, suppose a member of the general court is chosen by precept in April, 1854, the first Wednesday in the January next after his election will be the first Wednesday in January, 1855, and another election will then have intervened.

Mr. MORTON. My construction of the language there used, which I admit was not very carefully considered, was, that the regular term of office shall commence on the first Wednesday in January, and shall continue until the first Wednesday in the next January. If there is a vacancy, it does not affect the term of office; in that case, the term of office would be occupied by two individuals, or it may be, by three or four. In order to meet the difficulty suggested by the gentleman from Boston, I will modify the resolve, by adding after the word "Constitution," the words "except members of the legislature," so that it will then stand as follows:—

Resolved, That the terms of all elective officers, provided for in this Constitution, except members of the legislature, shall commence on the first Wednesday in January next after their election.

Mr. MOREY, of Boston. I will inquire whether this applies to the election of governor and lieutenant-governor, and officers which are in some cases to be chosen by the legislature.

Mr. MORTON. It is already provided that their terms shall commence on the first Wednesday in January.

Mr. MOREY. Oftentimes it is the case that they are not chosen until sometime in the latter part of January.

Mr. OLIVER, of Lawrence. I wish to make an inquiry with regard to that amendment. I understand that the terms of all officers who are to be elected under this Constitution are to commence on the first Wednesday in January. Suppose I should be elected a military hero about the first of September, I want to know if I am to go without my commission until the next January? That would spoil all the beauties of our militia system.

Mr. HOOPER, of Fall River. I would suggest that in order to accommodate the gentleman from Lawrence, the word "civil" be inserted, so as to leave out all uncivil officers. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLIVER. That would be "doing the civil thing," I grant; but I hope it will not be considered that the military are uncivil.

Mr. HOOPER. Not at all.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President: We have labored so long here in trying to improve our Constitution and to make it perfectly correct in every respect, that we have grown amazingly critical, and I shall expect that everything that passes the ordeal here will bear the test of criticism as well as of legal and constitutional propriety. Endeavoring to profit by the suggestions which have been made to me from various quarters, I have made a little modification of my amendment, which I will state now, and I hope that gentlemen will be so kind as to suggest any improvements that it may require before I offer it formally, and after they have exercised their critical acumen upon it, I will substitute it for my other proposition, and hope that no objection can then be made to it. I propose to strike out the words, "except members of the legislature," and insert, "not otherwise" before the words "provided for," so that it will read:—

Resolved, That the terms of all elective officers not otherwise provided for in this Constitution, shall commence on the first Wednesday in January next after their election.

If that does not cover the whole ground, I should be very happy to learn what the exceptions are.

Mr. HALE, of Bridgewater. I hope the gentleman from Taunton will not suppose that I objected to his amendment for the purpose of criticism; it was only because I thought there was a defect in it that ought to be remedied. I have no desire to criticise the reports which are presented here by any member of this body.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to, and the resolves, as amended, were finally passed.

Saturday,]

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS. — WALKER — TRAIN — BIRD — HOOPER — MARVIN — EARLE.

[July 30th.

Distributing the New Constitution—Reports of Debates, &c.

Mr. WALKER, of North Brookfield. An order was passed this morning that one hundred thousand copies of the present Constitution of this State, together with the new Constitution to be submitted to the people, should be published in the same manner with the general laws and resolves, and distributed to every family in the Commonwealth. I find that the present Constitution has already been published and is now in process of being distributed. I hope, therefore, that the vote by which this order was passed will be reconsidered, for it will be entirely unnecessary and involve a waste of the public money to have the present Constitution printed again, as is proposed. —I move a reconsideration of that vote.

The motion was agreed to, and the question recurred on the adoption of the order.

Mr. WALKER. I move to strike out the words, "the present Constitution of the State, together with."

Mr. HALE, of Bridgewater, thought that it would be well to have both Constitutions sent out together, so that the people could have a better opportunity to compare them.

Mr. TRAIN. I wish to inquire of my friend from North Brookfield if he proposes that one hundred thousand copies shall be given to each family in the Commonwealth.

Mr. WALKER. That is not the language of the order.

Mr. TRAIN. I should like to hear it read, as he proposes to amend it.

The order was read, as follows:—

Resolved, That one hundred thousand copies of the new Constitution to be submitted to the people, be published in the same manner as the general laws and resolves, and distributed to every family in the Commonwealth.

Mr. BIRD. I should like to know whether the gentleman has ascertained that there are exactly a hundred thousand families in the Commonwealth, among whom these are to be distributed.

Mr. WALKER. Year before last, we published ninety thousand copies of the laws, and last year we published one hundred and sixty thousand copies, because there was a larger demand than usual, as they filed them away in all the lawyer's offices, where there was a great call for them. I supposed one hundred thousand copies would be sufficient.

Mr. BIRD, of Walpole. I beg to inform the gentleman from North Brookfield, that there are two more families in my neighborhood this year, than there were last. [A laugh.]

Mr. WALKER. Of course, the number of copies can be increased without much expense.

Mr. HALE, of Bridgewater. If the gentleman from North Brookfield has no objection, I will offer an amendment to his proposition—to add the following words: "And one copy shall be furnished to each family of the Commonwealth." I think that will put the matter beyond all question.

Mr. WALKER. I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from North Brookfield, though I insist that it is not necessary, to make good grammar. How you can make the order mean that one hundred thousand copies are to be supplied to each family in the Commonwealth, I do not know, but I accept the amendment.

The order, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WALKER. I will venture to offer another order. It is as follows:—

Ordered, That the Committee on Reporting and Printing be instructed to employ some suitable person to receive and distribute all the documents ordered by the Convention, in the manner and form heretofore directed.

It is evident that this must be done by somebody, and it is equally evident that it cannot be done by the Secretary of State. It will be a great labor to forward all these documents, and somebody must be employed to do it, or authorized to employ somebody else.

Mr. BIRD, of Walpole. I do not see any necessity for this order. If I understand it, it directs the Secretary of State, or somebody else, no matter who, to attend to the distributing of documents from the office of the Secretary of State. I suppose that it provides also for the copies of the Reports of our Debates here in the hands of the printers. I suppose that the printers are paid to do that. You might as well employ somebody to forward all our newspapers. The gentleman says that somebody must do it. Let the members do it themselves.

Mr. WALKER. Direct their own copies of Reports, and newspapers, themselves, from the office of the printers to themselves at home!

Mr. BIRD. We were each allowed twenty-one newspapers per week—a pretty liberal allowance, as it seemed to me. Afterwards an order was passed that whoever chose, might substitute for their newspapers so many copies of the Reports of Debates. These newspapers we were entitled to during the session—but I take it that we shall take these Reports till the whole are printed.

Now, the State pays White & Potter to furnish these documents to us; and it is no more trouble to them to put them in the mail or hold them in their office, subject to our order, or till we call for them, than it has been heretofore; and I see no propriety therefore, in taxing the State to pay for the distribution of these documents. I do not know that it would be more trouble to go to White & Potter and acquaint them with the manner in which we wished these Reports sent to us, than it would be to go to a Committee. The point is this: It is the duty of White & Potter to furnish us these documents. They are paid for it, and I hope that there will be no additional expense on that account.

Mr. HOOPER, of Fall River. So far as I know there are two classes of these Reports to be distributed—those which are to be bound in octavo size, and those which are unbound. The Convention ought to provide some mode for the distribution of these as well as the journal. Those which have been taken in lieu of newspapers, the members will take care of, themselves. I do not agree with the remark of the gentleman from Walpole that the order would only entitle us to receive these Reports during the continuance of the session, for the reason that a Prospectus was sent out offering the whole Reports for a certain price—the price about which a daily newspaper would cost—and a resolution was offered allowing each member to take a copy of these Reports in preference to a copy of a newspaper. There is, therefore, no additional expense to the State in the number of copies of these Reports that have been taken. I think that each member should arrange with White & Potter in the manner they have contracted for; and it seems to me to be proper that those copies of the Reports which are to be bound should be distributed among the members according to an order of the Convention. I therefore think, that the order of the gentleman from North Brookfield is a proper one, and should be adopted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, of Milford, thought that some method should be provided by which every town should have its full proportion of these Debates, in order that the inhabitants of the State might see what the Convention had been doing.

Mr. MARVIN, of Boston, said he understood that the contract with White & Potter was for three thousand copies of these Debates, of which, fifteen hundred copies thus far had been delivered to the Convention, and fifteen hundred would remain to be distributed. The contract did not involve the distribution of the remaining fifteen hundred copies.

Mr. WALKER, of North Brookfield, was clearly of opinion that somebody should have charge of this business. In the first place, there was the ordinary Journal of Debates which was to be sent to each member; then there was the octavo edition of the Reports to be distributed. Then there were a hundred thousand copies of the Constitution to be sent out, and it would certainly be necessary to employ somebody to do all this. He considered that the resolution was indispensably necessary.

Mr. EARLE, of Worcester, was of opinion that before the Convention provided for the distribution of these documents, some measure should be taken by which a degree of justice should be done to members in relation to the copies of the Reports of Debates. He understood, that according to a certain order passed by the Convention, every member was entitled to subscribe for certain copies of these Reports—instead of so many newspapers to which he would otherwise be entitled. That privilege had been taken advantage of to such an extent—some members not taking any newspapers, and consequently taking twenty-one copies of the Reports—that there were not now copies sufficient to supply the members. After the first edition was exhausted, there were about one hundred members who were left without any copies whatever. So that, as the matter now stood, certain members who had taken advantage of this order, were entitled to twenty-one entire copies of this work, while one hundred other members who were entitled to the same number of copies, would not be allowed a single copy, because the edition was exhausted.

He had, however, prepared an order which would, to some extent, obviate that difficulty, and would entitle such members as had not been supplied with the quarto edition, to receive three copies of the octavo edition. Until that matter was placed right, he did not think that the Convention ought to take any order in regard to the farther distribution of these Reports. At any rate, he did not think that the State ought to be put to the expense of distributing these Reports, when a part of them belonged to other members. He understood that the messenger had taken the names of those gentlemen who had ordered each twenty-one copies, so that he might distribute

Saturday,]

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS. — SCHOULER — BIRD — EARLE — BATES — UPTON — WHITNEY.

[July 30th.

them according to their several orders. But it seemed to him, (Mr. Earle,) that if the Convention had not already given the messenger authority to do this work, the Convention should take the matter in hand, so that justice might be done, and that each member might receive at least, two or three copies of the octavo edition.

Mr. SCHOULER, of Boston, said he did not know how this difficulty was to be overcome. He had subscribed for ten copies, and intended to have them, having promised them all to friends, except one copy for himself.

Mr. BIRD, of Walpole, said he had subscribed for five copies, and could not get them.

Mr. MORTON, of Taunton, had subscribed for three copies, and could not get one.

Mr. SCHOULER. Perhaps that may be my case. I supposed that I was going to get ten copies. I confess I do not see how we can arrange it, very well.

Mr. BIRD, of Walpole. It seems to me that we are getting along pretty fast in voting money in this way, and I want to suggest that the better way to settle all these questions would be to refer them to a Special Committee. I move that the order now pending be referred to a Special Committee. I think it not improbable that such a Committee, could, in twenty minutes, report some plan which would satisfy the whole Convention.

The motion to refer the matter to a Special Committee was agreed to.

Mr. EARLE, of Worcester. I will now offer the order which I had prepared, and move that it be referred to the same Committee. This is the order:—

Ordered, That such members of the Convention as elected to take one or more copies of the official Reports of Debates, &c., instead of newspapers, to which they were entitled under the orders of this body, but who are unable to procure the same in consequence of the deficiency of the number provided, be entitled to receive the same number of copies of the octavo edition, not to exceed three copies in the whole, to any one member; and the Messenger is hereby directed to furnish said copies in addition to those already ordered to be furnished to the Convention.

Mr. EARLE. I would say that the Convention have already ordered fifteen hundred copies of the octavo edition to be printed. The expense of printing that, is no more than that of the quarto edition. It will not, in any contingency, add anything to the expenses of this Convention, because they are already ordered, and are to be paid for at any rate. But there will be more copies than will be required under the order for that edition, and those copies which are not taken by members under that order, will be left to be distributed years hereafter by the members of the Council, to themselves, their friends and others. By this resolve, we shall do some measure of justice, though not a full measure of justice, to those who were not the first to enter their names for copies, and at the same time we do no injustice to the State or to any one else. I move that the order be referred to the Special Committee already ordered.

Mr. LELAND, of Holliston. I wish to inquire of the gentleman, if the intention of his resolve is that those who have not received three copies heretofore, shall hereafter have them?

Mr. EARLE. It is simply to supply those members with copies who cannot obtain them under the order for the octavo edition. The whole of that edition, in consequence of some members taking so large a number—from ten to twenty-one copies—has been exhausted, and there are one hundred members of this Convention left without any. The question is, whether we will supply the twenty-one copies to the three hundred members, and leave the others without any?

Mr. LELAND. The difficulty is, that this order for copies of the Reports was passed after the order was passed respecting papers. I signed for all newspapers. Am I to have my papers continued, and have the Reports too? I think the members should all be allowed three copies of the Reports, alike. I should like the three copies, if possible.

Mr. EARLE. I understand the gentleman who has just taken his seat to say, then, that those members who subscribed for the twenty-one papers, and have got them, shall be entitled also to just as many copies as those who did not subscribe for any papers at all. My order only goes to the extent of supplying three copies of the Debates to those entitled to twenty-one papers, but who have not got them.

Mr. BATES, of Plymouth. The simple fact that the Convention have provided for the disposition of the whole fifteen hundred copies of the octavo edition, sets the matter at rest; and no order like that proposed by the gentleman from Worcester can be of any effect, unless you rescind the action of the Convention. In the first place, fifteen hundred copies were ordered to be printed and bound. Each member was to be supplied with one, and each town with one copy, and the remaining number of that fifteen hundred were to be distributed by the Secretary of State, in the same manner as the publications of the State are gratuitously distributed. Then, the Convention have voted that another fifteen hundred shall be printed and put up for sale, the proceeds of which shall be applied to defray the expenses, in part, of the reporting and printing. That disposes of that three thousand. Now, let me say, that the octavo edition is to cost some five or six dollars, and the order contemplates that each member may have three copies of those Debates, in lieu of so many weekly newspapers. I hope the proposition will be sent to the Special Committee, and it can be there discussed.

Mr. UPTON, of Boston. I have no objection to sending the matter to the Special Committee, but it seems to me that a statement ought to be made to the Convention of the facts connected with these Reports. The Convention have passed a vote to retain fifteen hundred copies for distribution. But how is it to be made? In the first place, the members of this Convention will take four hundred and twenty copies; the town clerks will take three hundred and thirty, making in all seven hundred and fifty, and there are less than one hundred copies more, to be distributed under ordinary distribution. So there will be left some six or seven hundred copies, for which no provision is made.

Now, Sir, this Convention passed an order, giving to members of the Convention liberty to hand their orders for papers, and also giving them the liberty to take one copy of the Debates, instead of a paper. Well, Sir, I should like to have some copies of the Debates. At the proper time, I made out the order, and handed it to the Secretary, and I was informed by him that my order could not be filled, that the Committee on Printing, or somebody else, had interfered. I did not see fit to bring the matter before the Convention, but I saw no reason or right why I should not have a copy or two of the Proceedings of this Convention. Here are members of the Convention who receive twenty-one copies, while I, pursuing the same course, under the same order, have not one copy. These are the facts. I say the members of the Convention who have not received their copies, ought to be entitled to one or more. I shall be perfectly satisfied to have the resolution provide for only one copy. There are a sufficient number of copies of the octavo edition to comply with such a resolution, and I think it would be better to distribute them now, to those members who have not secured a copy, than to leave them in the Secretary's office.

Mr. EARLE. I will state one fact to the Convention, which I should like to have well understood before this resolution is voted upon. There are members who are taking from ten to twenty-one copies of these Reports. If they choose to say that they will give them up, or a portion of them, then there would be copies enough to supply each member with his proportion, while the other members would not tax the State a cent for their papers. Now, if any arrangement can be made by which the proper officer can be authorized to distribute to each member not more than three copies of this Report, I shall be satisfied to leave it so; and if such an order should pass, I am willing to run my chance.

Mr. BATES. I desire, as chairman of the Committee on Printing, to say a single word in regard to the remarks of the gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Upton). I submit it to this Convention, whose fault it was, that these members were not supplied. The Committee reported, that in their opinion, fifteen hundred copies would be sufficient. Members had the whole matter before them, and if they wished to order more numbers, that was the time to have done it. Some have already ordered them, and others have left the matter open, intending to order them at the close of the Convention. The result is, that the numbers have been taken up. The Committee, finding that there was not a sufficient supply, and ascertaining, as well as they might, early in the session, what number would be wanted, ordered a reprint of the first edition, making it up to two thousand copies. That, apparently, would meet the demand. The matter was submitted to the Convention, and now it is said that certain members cannot get copies. Well, the Committee's attention has never been called to the subject, and nobody knows it until the end of the session. And now it is proposed to go back and reprint the whole matter, at an expense of four or five thousand dollars, or what is worse, take this octavo edition, and turn it over to the members who have neglected to supply themselves with newspapers.

Mr. WHITNEY, of Boylston. I think at the early part of the session there was a great deal of ignorance among the members as to the value of these Reports, and members did not, for a considerable time, find out the value of them. Many did not subscribe at all for them, who would have done so had they known the worth of them. I subscribed for four copies, and have obtained them. But I am willing to yield up one of the four, in order to make up the deficiency; and I hope the Committee will be commissioned to receive voluntary contributions of copies from those who have subscribed for them, and see how many they can raise in that way. I subscribe one out of my four.

Saturday,]

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS, &c.—UPTON—HOOPER—CHAPIN—DAVIS—BRIGGS.

[July 30th.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is requested to state a fact in reply to the gentleman from Boston. From information received by the officers of the Convention, he is informed that the edition is exhausted, and that they cannot be supplied unless by ordering a reprint.

Mr. UPTON, of Boston. I did not intend to make any reflection upon the Secretary of this body. Very far from that. I was satisfied with the explanation he gave me; but I do not see what the statement of the chairman of the Committee, as to what they have done, has to do with the rights of us individually. But as this matter is to go to the Committee, I should like to have those gentlemen who have subscribed for from ten to twenty copies, stand up and vote, that those who have the same rights as themselves, and have no copies, should not be entitled to them.

Mr. HOOPER, of Fall River. It strikes me that gentlemen have nobody to complain of but themselves. Turn to the proceedings of the second day of the Convention, when the subject in relation to newspapers was first brought up. I offered the following resolve, for the purpose of notifying members that they could obtain these Reports if they chose:—

Ordered, That members be authorized to select copies of the Reports of the transactions of this Convention, in lieu of an equal number of papers authorized by the order of yesterday, at the option of the members.

The next day, or a few days after, another order was introduced, making a copy of the Reports equivalent to a weekly newspaper. Here was an opportunity, and a notice to each member to choose which they pleased, and had they put down their names for the copies of the Debates, a sufficient number would have been ordered, and they would have received them. If they have neglected it, it is their own fault, and they ought not to complain. I think it is unjust to make up the deficiency by the distribution of the octavo bound volume, in lieu of the quarter volume unbound. I understand that to be the proposition. I should like to have justice done in this matter. Every member is sure of having one copy, by the standing order. I should like to know how many members have given orders, during the early part of the session, which have not been supplied. I hope the Committee will look at that subject and report how many orders have been given which have not been supplied. But I do not think it is right, that men who have neglected the matter until this time, should now come in and complain, when the whole trouble is attributable to their own negligence.

Mr. CHAPIN, of Webster. I think it will put an end to this whole discussion, if we will add, as an amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Worcester, (Mr. Earle,) the words: "And that every member receiving copies of these Debates shall be required to read them." [Laughter.]

The question was then taken, and the resolution was referred to the Committee already ordered to be appointed.

The PRESIDENT appointed the Committee, consisting of the following gentlemen:—

Messrs. Walker, of Brookfield, Williams, " Taunton, Schouler, " Boston,
White, " Quincy,
Phinney, for Chatham,
Parsons, of Lawrence,
Bird, " Walpole.

Lanc Martial.

Mr. STETSON, of Braintree, moved to take from the table the resolve of the Committee on the Bill of Rights, on the subject of the Law Martial.

The motion was not agreed to.

Reconsideration.

Mr. STETSON then moved to take from the table the motion of Mr. White, of Quincy, to reconsider the vote by which the resolve upon the subject of the House of Representatives was passed.

The PRESIDENT said the papers were in the hands of the Committee on Revision.

After an interval of half an hour, there being no business before the Convention,

Mr. DAVIS, of Plymouth, asked if it would be in order for the minority of a Committee to make a Report.

The PRESIDENT replied in the negative, but said the minority of a Committee might make a statement of facts.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I desire, upon the part of the minority of the Committee of which I am a member, to make a statement of facts.

The PRESIDENT. There is no question before the Convention. A Report of a Committee must be in writing; but the minority cannot report, unless their Report accompanies, or is preceded, by that of the majority. The gentleman can move to instruct the Committee to report, if he chooses.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the leave of the Convention, to make a Report upon the part of the minority of a Committee. A subject has been presented to them, upon which the majority of the Committee have not seen fit to report at all, and the Convention have, therefore, had no opportunity to act upon it.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman must see that the minority of a Committee cannot report, unless that Report accompanies that of the majority. The gentleman, as a member of that Committee, or as a member of the Convention, may move to instruct the Committee to report, or he may submit a proposition; but he cannot present a Report as representing the minority of the Committee.

Mr. DAVIS. I am aware that it is not strictly in order; but I thought I might ask the leave of the Convention to present that Report. In the early part of the session, a resolve was passed on the motion of the gentleman from Natick, (Mr. Wilson,) to instruct the Committee on the Frame of Government, to inquire into the expediency of providing in the Constitution, that no member of either branch of the legislature, during the term for which he was elected, should be appointed by the governor to any office in the Commonwealth. It is a matter about which I presume there can be no difference of opinion in the Convention. I desire now, upon the part of the minority of the Committee, to make a Report upon that resolution.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has already ruled that the minority of the Committee cannot make a Report. The gentleman had the right to move to instruct that Committee to report, and he did make that motion upon a former occasion, but the motion was not agreed to by the Convention. He therefore thinks it is now not in order to make any motion in relation to the subject.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to a question of order. The order introduced by the gentleman from Natick covers more ground than the Report of the minority of the Committee, which I propose to present. I therefore submit that it is not the same matter which the Convention refused to instruct the Committee to report upon.

The PRESIDENT. If the order covered more ground than the Report, it covered the same ground, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

[The President here vacated the chair, temporarily, and it was occupied by Mr. Hillard, of Boston.]

Resolution of Thanks to the President.

Mr. BRIGGS, of Pittsfield. I rise, Sir, to perform an act of courtesy usual upon such occasions, to the presiding officer of this Convention. I am informed that the parliamentary usages of the body which for more than half a century has assembled in this venerable hall, makes it proper for me to do it, and I do it with pleasure. I do it at this time, Sir, because it will be necessary for me to leave town this afternoon. The other part of the ceremony will be done upon the proper occasion.

Mr. President: before sending this resolution to the Chair, allow me to say, that the work which the people sent us here to do, is almost completed. We are soon to return to that honored constituency whose servants we are, to render an account of our stewardship. As an organized body, constituted for a specific and important purpose, we shall soon be dissolved into our original element.

"Like bubbles on the sea of matter borne,
We rise, we break, and to that sea return."

But, Sir, that great sea of humanity, what we call the people, will continue to heave and roll its deep waves forever. The muse of history, through the medium of these truthful reporters, has written down our words. These faithful secretaries have recorded our acts, and the recording angel has carried to the court of Heaven, and placed upon its records, the motives by which we have been actuated. These are all sealed up to us, for the judgment of the great day. Whether right or wrong, they now belong to our past history, and we must stand by them in future judgment. To those who have been associated together as we have been, in common labors and responsibilities, the moment of separation is one of intense interest. After weeks and months of daily official and personal intercourse, we look into each others faces, many of us, for the last time. For the last time we have felt the grasp of friendly hands, and for the last time heard the tones of pleasant and cheering voices.

Now it is that the excitements and agitations of political differences, clashing opinions, and stirring debates, are subdued and hushed, and the kindlier and better feelings of our nature gently swell up and take possession of the heart. It should be so.—I am glad it is so. The partizan is lost in the

Saturday,]

VOTE OF THANKS, &c. — BRIGGS — WILSON — BOUTWELL — LORD — PARKER.

[July 30th.]

man—the antagonist disappears and we look upon a brother.

I am sure these generous feelings at this moment animate the breasts of the four hundred delegates now before me listening to my poor words. I hope no one of us will carry from this place any unfriendly feelings towards any other one. It gives me great pleasure to say that I have never seen a session of a large deliberative assembly pass away with such general and uniform courtesy, decorum, and propriety of conduct, as has been observed in this body. Without extending these remarks, permit me to add that I look upon these intelligent and manly faces, and I fear upon many for the last time, with no emotions but those of regret, respect, and good will. I shall carry away with me no ruffled or irritated feelings towards any member of this honored assembly. The interest of this moment of separation, to my own mind, is deepened, by the fact that I neither wish or expect, ever again to be a member of any deliberative body, whilst I live.

The general health which has prevailed amongst us, is a subject of profoundest gratitude to God. Of the four hundred and twenty delegates elected to this Convention on the seventh of March last, there has been but one death. It is sad, indeed, to reflect, that "we are not all here." We shall soon return to our homes, and greet and be greeted by the voice and hand of affection and love. But there is one lonely mansion made desolate by the death of one of our honored associates, where no such greeting will be had. I know the sympathy of all these hearts will gather round that mournful home, and that earnest prayers will go up to the God of the widow and the orphan, that his choicest blessings may now and ever be poured out upon its stricken inmates.

I offer, Mr. President, the following resolution, which I doubt not will receive the hearty and unanimous concurrence of this Convention:—

Resolved, That the thanks of this Convention be given to N. P. BANKS, JR., for the dignified, fair, and able manner in which he has presided over its deliberations.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, of Milford. I desire to know what is now before the Convention?

The PRESIDENT. [Mr. Hillard, of Boston, being in the Chair.] The Chair is unable to answer the gentleman at this moment. The Orders of the Day have all been disposed of.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand it is not expected that the Committee on Revision will be able to make their Report before three o'clock this afternoon. Under these circumstances, I would suggest that we take a recess until that time.

Mr. WILSON, of Natick. I think the Convention had better not take a recess for the present. I understand the Committee on Revision may possibly report in the course of fifteen or twenty minutes. I would suggest that it would be better to wait for a half an hour, and if they do not report by that time, we can then judge better to what time it will be best to adjourn.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that Committee will not be ready to report until three o'clock, but if there is any business which can be brought before the Convention, I have no wish to adjourn.

Mr. WILSON. If the Committee are not to report until that time, I would move that the Convention take a recess until three o'clock.

Report from a Committee.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin, from the Committee on Revision, submitted a Report, asking that the Committee be discharged from the farther consideration of a resolve referred to them, adopted by the Convention on the 30th of May, on the mode in which the governor shall be chosen by the legislature, in case of the non-election of that officer by the people.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on discharging the Committee.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I have only to say that the Committee, in the examination of the resolutions passed by the Convention, found a resolution like that just read, which was passed on the 30th of May. Resolutions were passed, subsequently, that in case of the failure of the people to elect, the House should select three out of the number of persons voted for having the highest number of votes, if so many persons were voted for, whose names should be sent to the Senate, and from these names the Senate should select one. There being an apparent conflict between the two resolutions, the Committee ask to be discharged.

The question was taken on the acceptance of the Report, and it was accepted.

Mr. LORD. I desire to know whether it is not necessary to suspend the rules, to reconsider a vote by which that resolve was adopted? whether having adopted a resolution, it is competent for a mere majority to reject it? I think that it is necessary, in order to prevent that resolution from going into the Constitution, to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it is not necessary, but that the action of the Convention in the acceptance of the Report at this time, is of such a kind, as may be had without a motion to reconsider.

Mr. LORD. The Committee on Revision are discharged from the consideration of that resolution, but has not that resolution been passed by this Convention? Have we not voted that it is expedient to amend the Constitution in that mode, just as much without that vote to discharge the Committee as with it? Suppose the Committee on Revision had come in, and, instead of asking to be discharged from the farther consideration of the resolution, had asked to be discharged from the farther consideration of the entire subject, and they are discharged? Then where are the amendments? They are still adopted. This resolution was adopted. That resolution stands adopted as the resolution of the Convention. Now it seems to me entirely clear, that it is our duty to reconsider the vote by which that resolution was adopted; and, it seems to me, also, that a suspension of the rules is required to dispose of it. Because, otherwise, a bare majority of this Convention can undo all that has been done, notwithstanding the rule shall not be reconsidered. I do not understand that the fact that the Committee asks to be discharged, changes the case at all, because it is just as competent for a majority of this Convention to discharge, upon a motion of any individual, as for the Committee to Report and ask to be discharged.

Mr. PARKER, of Cambridge. It appears to me, that the conclusion of the gentleman from Salem must be regarded as correct: that the action of the Convention at this time, has merely taken the subject from the hands of the Committee, so that it is again in Convention. But the question which arises in my mind, is, whether the subsequent action of the Convention, passing a resolution different and entirely inconsistent with this, does not operate as an abrogation of the previous action, in such a manner that it is not necessary to take farther action upon the subject. It would seem as though that would operate as a repeal, as annulling the resolution which the Committee are now discharged from, so that it cannot stand; and, therefore, we need not take any farther action.

Mr. LORD. When this resolution was under consideration, the question of order was raised; that it was not in order, because the Convention had acted upon the subject-matter of it. The President of the Convention then decided, that it was not a point of order; that it was not in conflict with that rule; that it was a question of consistency to be determined by the Convention. We have, therefore, determined that it was not inconsistent; because, otherwise, they would not have adopted it. They must be presumed to have decided that it was not inconsistent. If this can stand in that mode, then a bare majority, on a motion to discharge the Revising Committee from the consideration of any amendment, can defeat an amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Salem, that there is no motion before the Convention.

Mr. LORD. I move that the rules be suspended, so that the resolution may be taken up for reconsideration, with a view to its rejection.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think it that is too late to reconsider a vote taken on the thirtieth of May last.

Mr. LORD. What I desire, is, to move a suspension of that part of the rule which limits a motion to reconsider to the next day after the resolution was passed.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I suppose that, practically, whatever course we take, we shall come to the same result: that a majority of this Convention will decide whether the resolution shall stand or shall not stand. I see no other result, whether the rule be suspended or not. If the rule be suspended, and a motion is made to reconsider, that question, of course, can be decided by a majority. I think there is no principle involved in this. Here is an apparent conflict between the action of the Convention at one time, and its action at another. I think that, in fairness, we should let the action on this first resolution, subside.

Mr. LORD. I think that in all fairness we should stand by this which we understood to be the well defined view of the Convention. But at the same time, I think we should do it regularly. I do not make this motion to have it defeat the resolution, but because I wish to have the matter conducted with order, regularity, and propriety. I think that is the only course, and I made the motion myself, because I wanted to show, that, so far as I was concerned, having raised the question myself, I had a disposition to have the matter settled just exactly as it ought to be settled with propriety. I think that, in order to have it stand right, the Convention must reject the resolution. And to reject it, we must reconsider, and to reconsider, it is necessary to suspend that part of the rule which limits a motion to reconsider to the next day. If gentlemen sustain the motion to suspend, then it is in the power of the Convention to make a reconsideration, and then it is in the power of a majority to do as they please with the resolution.

Saturday,]

RECONSIDERATION, &c. — MORTON — HILLARD — LORD — WILSON — BRIGGS — LIVERMORE.

[July 30th.

Mr. MORTON, of Taunton. I see no occasion for passing this vote of reconsideration, looking back for so great a length of time as this; because I think on every principle of law and constitution, the thing stands perfectly well. Early in the session, I do not remember the date, a resolve passed this body respecting amendments to the Constitution, so that if there was a failure to elect a governor, he should be chosen by a joint ballot of the two Houses. Afterwards there was a resolution passed, that in filling a vacancy, when there was no choice by the people, the House should select three from the number of persons having the highest number of votes, and out of them the Senate should select one. This was the deliberate action of the Convention. It seems to me the whole matter is perfectly settled, because it is entirely apparent that the second resolution is utterly inconsistent with the first; they cannot both stand. One or the other is annihilated. Which is it? I believe that the rule is well settled that the last action of the Convention shall prevail, and that any subsequent action, whether of law or constitution, repeals all laws inconsistent with it. The adoption of the second resolution being entirely inconsistent with the first, was just as much a repeal of the first, or a rescinding of it, as if done in so many words. Therefore, I think the first, having been repealed, there is nothing to reconsider, that all stands perfectly well; and therefore we have no need to pass a rule allowing to move a reconsideration.

Mr. HILLARD, of Boston. It will be observed that the adoption of the resolutions referred to is simply an expression of opinion on the part of the Convention. On one occasion, the Convention voted that it was expedient to amend the Constitution in one manner, and on a subsequent occasion they voted that it was inexpedient to amend the Constitution in that manner. The Committee to whom the resolutions were referred, seeing their inconsistency with each other, ask to be discharged from the consideration of that resolution which it is understood it is wished should not prevail. Now, what is the action of the Convention to be, in case any retrograde steps are to be taken? We must first reconsider the vote by which it was referred to the Committee. Both resolutions are in their hands, unless we accept the Report. Therefore, I do not see how it is now in the power of the Convention, because, as we have accepted the Report, the Convention has no power over it until we reconsider the vote by which it was put into the hands of the Committee.

Mr. LORD. The Convention has discharged that Committee, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT. The papers are not in the possession of the Convention at present. The motion to reconsider is not necessary.

Mr. LORD. I would ask if it would be competent for a bare majority to discharge a Committee from any other branch of this subject, and thereby defeat the amendment which has been already passed?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is not to give opinions in advance, but will rule upon cases as they occur.

Mr. WILSON, of Natick, moved that the Convention adjourn, to meet at three o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. BRIGGS. I hope my friend will withdraw that motion for a few moments.

Mr. WILSON withdrew it.

Mr. BRIGGS. I wish to state to members of the Convention, that our friend the Chaplain has been desirous, during the session, to have half an hour at some time, to speak to us upon the subject of education, in its various forms. There is now more than half an hour before the earliest time when we have been in the habit of adjourning; and I would respectfully request those gentlemen who have not duties elsewhere that call them away, to remain after the adjournment, and listen to what he has to say. It will be but a short address.

Mr. BUTLER. There is now no other business before the Convention; and knowing that it is nearly impossible to get the Report of the Revising Committee here at an hour sufficiently early to enable us to deal with it this afternoon, and that therefore it will be necessary for us to have a session on another day, I move that when the Convention adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday morning next, at ten o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Pay Roll.

Mr. LIVERMORE, of Cambridge. I wish to make a statement in relation to the pay roll. The pay roll is now made up, with the exception of one name, and the governor and council will be in session at one o'clock to-day. The governor, and some members of the council, have engagements on Monday, and will not be able to be here on that day to draw warrants, if the Convention should adjourn until Monday without having a session this afternoon. The pay roll is made up, and ready to be passed upon, and the warrants can be drawn this afternoon if we have a session; and it seems to me that it will be hardly worth while to have the governor and council come together again, which they could not do before Tuesday or Wednesday.

Mr. LORD, of Salem, moved that the Committee on the Pay Roll be instructed to make up and pay the account of Hon. HENRY WILSON, at the rate of three dollars per pay in addition to the ordinary compensation, during the time that he acted as President pro tempore.

Mr. WILSON. I thank my friend from Salem for his kindness in making that proposition, but I must beg leave to say to him and to the members of the Convention, that under the circumstances, I do not think it would be right or proper for the Convention either to pass this, or for me to take it. I should be sorry to have such a vote passed, and I hope that my friend will withdraw the motion. It was only for a day or two that I was in the chair performing those duties; if it had been a month or six weeks, it would have altered the case.

The question being put, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER then moved that the Convention adjourn.

Mr. WILSON. As the governor will not be here on Monday, I think we had better meet this afternoon, and see about the pay roll.

The question being put, on the motion to adjourn, it was not agreed to.

Reconsideration.

Mr. LIVERMORE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Convention agreed to adjourn until ten o'clock on Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the motion that when the Convention adjourns, it be to meet on Monday at ten o'clock; and it was not agreed to.

On motion, the Convention then adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled, and was called to order by the President at three o'clock, P. M.

Mr. WILSON, of Natick. I am informed, Mr. President, that it will be impossible for the Committee on Revision to report this afternoon, and it will be useless for us to remain here. They will be able to report on Monday, and I therefore hope that we shall adjourn now, and meet at ten o'clock on Monday.

Mr. LIVERMORE, of Cambridge. I beg leave to state to the Convention, that in the course of a few minutes the pay roll will be made up, and the Committee on the Pay Roll will be ready to make their Report. The pay roll has been made up, in pursuance of the order of the Convention, including Monday next, and the governor has summoned the council, so that they will be ready this afternoon to draw the warrants for the pay of members. The governor and some members of the council have engagements on Monday, so that they will not be able to draw warrants at that time. They have come here from a distance, some of them, for the purpose of advising the governor in relation to this matter; and it appears to me that the warrants can be drawn to-day as well as to have the matter deferred until next week. The Convention have voted that no member shall receive any pay after Monday next, and it seems to me to be wholly useless to postpone action upon the pay roll to a future time, because it is not certain that the governor and council will be in session again for a number of days; and until the warrants are drawn, the members of the Convention cannot receive their pay. I do not suppose that if the warrants should be drawn this afternoon, the members would be able to get their pay before Monday, for the office of the Treasurer usually closes at an early hour in the afternoon. I presume members could not receive their pay and leave this afternoon, nor would they wish to leave the Convention without a quorum, or without the proper number of members present to finish up the business of the session; but it seems to me that if members understand this, they will not vote to adjourn until after action is had upon the pay roll. It will be but a very short time before the Committee will be ready to make their Report to the Convention.

Mr. WILSON. I move that when the Convention adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next at ten o'clock.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to.

After a few moments, no business being presented, Mr. WILSON moved that the Convention adjourn.

The question being taken, on a division, there were—ayes, 91; noes, 67—so the motion was agreed to, and the PRESIDENT declared the Convention adjourned until Monday morning at ten o'clock.

Monday.] DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS, &c. — LIVERMORE — OLIVER — WALKER — EARLE — BOUTWELL.

[August 1st.

Mr. LIVERMORE. Is it not in order to call for the yeas and nays on that motion?

The PRESIDENT. The Convention has adjourned.

MONDAY, August 1, 1853.

The Convention assembled at ten o'clock, A. M. Prayer by the Chaplain.

The journal of Saturday was read.

Pay Roll.

Mr. LIVERMORE, of Cambridge, from the Committee on the Pay Roll, submitted the following Report:—

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

In Convention, August 1, 1853.

The Committee on the Pay Roll, in compliance with an order of the Convention, directing them to make up the pay roll, have attended to that duty, in accordance with a resolve passed on the 28th day of June last, and report the sum herewith, amounting to $114,092, and also report the accompanying order.

For the Committee,
ISAAC LIVERMORE, Chairman.

Ordered, That the Pay Roll of the Convention, as reported by the Committee, in accordance with the resolve of the 28th of June last, and the order of July 29th, be transmitted by the Secretary, to the Auditor of Accounts, and that he be requested to obtain from the Governor a warrant upon the treasury of the Commonwealth, to authorize the payment thereof, and notify the Convention when the warrant has been drawn.

Mr. GRISWOLD, for Erving, moved that the Report be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Personal Explanation.

Mr. OLIVER, of Lawrence. I ask permission of the Convention to make a personal explanation. In the early part of the session, I was under the impression that each proposition submitted to the consideration of the House, would have three separate readings prior to the final action thereon, and that there would be, of course, as many opportunities for discussion and amendment. In this, I was in error, and laboring under this misapprehension, I gave a negative vote in a case in which it was not my intention so to do, on the final passage. I allude to the resolve on the secret ballot. I was very desirous of pressing the same amendments which I offered when it was under consideration, had another opportunity been offered. Voting as I did, I stand upon the record in direct opposition to my real sentiments and intentions, upon the general question. I therefore make this explanation of my affirmative intention, that I may, thereby, appear in the proper light.

Protest in relation to Rights of Colored Citizens.

Mr. KEYES, for Abington. Mr. President: A paper has been placed in my hands, purporting to be a protest against the action of this Convention, with the request that I would present it here, and move that it be placed upon the records of this body, if it is in order to make that motion. I will state, in a few words, what it is. It is a protest from a number of colored persons, in the name and behalf of the colored population of Massachusetts, who, claiming to be citizens of Massachusetts, under our laws, have been permanently disqualified from holding any position in the militia; which is, in fact, declaring that they are not citizens. They have stated this in very respectful language; and I will read the reason why they want this petition placed upon the records of the Convention. They say: "We respectfully ask that this protest may be placed upon the records of the Convention, and published with the proceedings of the Convention, that the stigma may not rest upon our memory, of having tamely acquiesced in a proscription equally at war with the American Constitution, with the Massachusetts Bill of Rights, and the claims of human nature." I therefore ask, in compliance with their request, that the protest may be read, and then that it be placed upon the records.

The protest was read.

The question being put on ordering the protest to be placed upon the records of the Convention, on a division, there were—ayes, 97; noes, 66—so the motion was agreed to.

Distribution of Documents.

Mr. WALKER, of North Brookfield, from the Special Committee, to whom were referred two orders of the Convention of July 30th, in relation to the distribution of the documents of the Convention, reported the following resolves:—

1. Resolved, that White & Potter be instructed to deliver, without additional charge, the remaining numbers of the quarto edition of the Journal of Debates, at such places in Boston, as the members shall respectively order.

2. Resolved, That each member of this Convention be furnished with one copy of the Journal of the Debates, of the octavo edition, additionally to the one heretofore ordered.

3. Resolved, That the Messenger be directed to deliver, without additional cost, the copies of the Debates aforesaid, together with the Journal of the Convention, heretofore ordered, with the completed file of the documents belonging to each member, at such place in Boston, as the members shall respectively order. And also to send, in the usual manner, the copies of the Journal and Debates to the towns, cities, and public bodies, as ordered by the Convention, and also to send to each town or city, its quota, in proportion to population, of copies of the New Constitution, heretofore ordered to be published.

Mr. EARLE, of Worcester. I move to amend the second resolve, by adding thereto the following words:—

Provided, That no member shall be entitled to more than three copies, including those received instead of newspapers.

Mr. EARLE. This Report, I presume, was made upon an order which was submitted by me, and referred to the Committee, on Saturday, the object of which, was simply an act of justice to that portion of the members of the Convention who had not been able to obtain the copies to which they were entitled under a former order; while some members have received, under a former order, as I stated on that occasion, various numbers, from ten to twenty-one copies. Now, this resolve, instead of providing for those who have not been able to obtain the copies to which they were entitled, provides that those who have received twenty-one copies, shall have three copies more, while those who are entitled to twenty-one copies, and cannot get them, shall have but three copies in all; and this is the justice which the Committee propose in that resolve. If that is to stand just as it is reported, I shall vote against the whole. I was entitled to six copies, under the former order, and other members were entitled to different numbers, which they have not been able to get. It makes no difference to me, personally, whether I get these or not. I am entitled to one copy, as every other member is, under another order, and that will satisfy all my wants; still, I had concluded to take six copies, and distribute them among some of my friends; others have got theirs, and have distributed them. My object was simply to remedy the defect, and give some measure of justice to those who had not taken their copies. I cannot imagine any reason why this resolve should be brought in as it is, giving those who have already received ten, fifteen, or twenty copies, three copies more. The other day, when I offered that order, I was met at once by the exclamation, from various quarters, that it never would do to give three copies to members who were entitled to eight or ten, because it would exhaust the treasury of the State, and besides that, it would exhaust all the copies, so that future governors and councillors would have no copies to distribute among their friends. Then, they could do no such thing; but now, it is proposed not only to give two or three copies to those who are justly entitled to ten or twenty, but in addition to that, to give those who have had ten or twenty copies already, just as many as we have. We do not ask for justice—we do not ask for what we are entitled to, under a former vote, to put us on an equality with those who have already got theirs; but if we cannot have this for which we do ask, without voting an additional number to those who have already had fifteen or twenty, I, for one, will give up what I am entitled to, and be content with the single copy that I shall get under the other order.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to lay this Report upon the table, in order that we may have an opportunity to consider it a little, and in the meantime proceed to the more important and pressing business before us.

The motion was agreed to.

Revised Constitution.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee appointed to prepare the amendments to be submitted to the people, reported a series of resolves, accompanied by a form of a revised Constitution.

The resolves were read, as follows:—

In the Convention of the Delegates of the people assembled in Boston, on the first Wednesday of May, in the year 1853, for the purpose of revising and amending the Constitution of this Commonwealth.

Resolved, That the revised Constitution, proposed by said Convention, be submitted to the people of the Commonwealth for their ratification and adoption, in the manner following, viz:—

I. The Preamble; A Declaration of the Rights of the Inhabitants of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; The Frame of Government, with its Preamble and Chapters numbered One,

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—BOUTWELL—LORD—SCHOULER—SARGENT.

[August 1st.

Two, Three, Four, Five, Six, Seven, Eight, Nine, Ten, Eleven, Twelve, Thirteen, and Fourteen, entitled, respectively—General Court,—Senate,—House of Representatives,—Governor,—Lieutenant-Governor,—Council,—Secretary,—Treasurer, Auditor, and Attorney-General,—Judiciary Power,—Qualifications of Voters and Elections,—Oaths and Subscriptions,—Militia,—The University at Cambridge, the School Fund and the Encouragement of Literature,—Miscellaneous Provisions,—Revisions and Amendments of the Constitution—as a distinct proposition, numbered “One.”

If this proposition, so submitted, shall be ratified and adopted by a majority of the legal voters of the Commonwealth, present and voting thereon, at meetings duly called, then the same shall be the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

II. The provision respecting the granting of the writ of Habeas Corpus, as a proposition, numbered “Two.”

If this proposition shall be ratified and adopted, it shall be an addition to the provision respecting the Habeas Corpus.

III. The provision respecting the rights of juries in criminal trials, as a proposition, numbered “Three.”

If this proposition be ratified and adopted, it shall be an addition to the article in the Declaration of Rights, respecting the rights of persons charged with crimes.

IV. The provision respecting claims against the Commonwealth, as a proposition, numbered “Four.”

If this proposition be ratified and adopted, it shall be an addition to Article XI., of the Declaration of Rights.

V. The provision respecting imprisonment for debt, as a proposition, numbered “Five.”

If this proposition be adopted, it shall be an addition to the Article in the Declaration of Rights respecting excessive bail and fines.

VI. The provision respecting sectarian schools, as a proposition, numbered “Six.”

If this proposition be ratified and adopted, it shall be an addition to Article IV. of Chapter XII., entitled, “The University at Cambridge, The School Fund, and the Encouragement of Literature.” If proposition numbered “One” shall not be adopted, it shall be added as an amendment to the Constitution.

VII. The provision respecting Corporations, as a proposition, numbered “Seven.”

VIII. The provision respecting Banks and Banking, as a proposition, numbered “Eight.”

If the propositions numbered “Seven” and “Eight” be ratified and confirmed, they shall be added as separate articles, or if either of them be ratified and confirmed, as an article in Chapter XIII., entitled, “Miscellaneous Provisions.”

If proposition numbered “One” be not ratified and confirmed, they shall be added as amendments to the Constitution.

Resolved, That at the meetings for the election of Governor, Senators, and Representatives to the General Court, to be held on the second Monday of November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, the qualified voters of the several towns and cities shall vote by ballot upon each of the propositions aforesaid, for or against the same, which ballots shall be inclosed within a sealed envelope according to the provisions of an Act of this Commonwealth, passed on the twenty-second day of May, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-one, and an Act passed the twentieth day of May, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-two, and no ballots not so inclosed shall be received. And said votes shall be received, sorted, counted, declared, and recorded, in open meeting, in the same manner as is by law provided in reference to votes for governor, and a true copy of the record of said votes, attested by the selectmen and town clerk of each of the several towns, and the mayor and aldermen and city clerk of each of the several cities, shall be sealed up by said selectmen and mayor and aldermen, and directed to the Secretary of the Commonwealth, with a superscription expressing the purport of the contents thereof, and delivered to the sheriff of the county within fifteen days after said meetings, to be by him transmitted to the Secretary's office, on or before the third Monday of December next; or, the said selectmen and mayor and aldermen shall themselves transmit the same to the Secretary's office, on or before the day last aforesaid.

Resolved, That the Secretary shall deliver said copies so transmitted to him, to a Committee of this Convention consisting of who shall assemble at the State House on the third Monday of December next, and open the same, and examine and count the votes, so returned; and if it shall appear that either of said propositions has been adopted by a majority of votes, then the proposition so adopted shall become and be either the whole or a portion of the Constitution of this Commonwealth, as hereinbefore provided, and the said Committee shall promulgate the results of said votes upon each of said propositions, by causing the same to be published in those newspapers in which the laws are now published; and shall also notify the Governor and Legislature, as soon as may be, of the said results; and the Governor shall forthwith make public proclamation of the fact of the adoption of either or all of said propositions, as the whole or as parts of the Constitution of this Commonwealth.

Resolved, That each of said propositions shall be considered as a whole by itself, to be adopted in the whole, or rejected in the whole. And every voter may vote on each proposition by its appropriate number, without specifying in his ballot any reference to the subject of the proposition, and by writing opposite to the number of each proposition the word Yes or No,—but the vote on all of the propositions shall be written or printed on one ballot, in substance as follows:—

Constitutional Propositions.

Proposition No. I.,	• • •	Yes or No.
Proposition No. II.,	• • •	Yes or No.
Proposition No. III.,	• • •	Yes or No.
And to Proposition No. VIII.,	• • •	Yes or No.

Resolved, That a printed copy of these Resolutions, with the several Constitutional Propositions annexed, shall be attested by the Secretaries of the Convention, and transmitted by them, as soon as may be, to the selectmen of each town, and the mayor and aldermen of each city, in the Commonwealth, whose duty it shall be to insert a proper article in reference to the voting upon said propositions, in the warrant calling the meetings aforesaid, on the second Monday of November next.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. It will be of course apparent to the Convention, that two main matters are before us. One is, to perfect the action of the Committee, and to take the judgment of the Convention as to whether the Committee has faithfully and impartially incorporated the views of the Convention into the various propositions; and having done that, in the next place, to determine the mode of submitting the revised matter to the people. I suppose, from the intimations and assurances that have been given upon all sides, so far as I know, that it is the desire of all that the Constitution should be, so far as it can be made, a perfect instrument; we all agree upon that, whether we agree to the propositions contained in the Constitution, or not; therefore, I believe I may say, that it is the desire of the Committee that the Convention should first go to work to perfect what is here presented, and that the mode of submitting it to the people should be considered as a subsequent matter. With that view in my own mind, and trusting that it may be acceptable to the Convention, I move that the first resolve be so divided that the subject matter of proposition number one be first considered, and then that the Convention proceed to consider the subsequent propositions in their order respectively.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to submit a preliminary question to the Convention. The first resolve covers in its terms several propositions with regard to the form of the Constitution presented by the Committee. It may be desirable that the Constitution should be read to the Convention; but the Chair will take the judgment of the Convention. If no member desires to have it read, the reading will be dispensed with.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It would seem to be proper that the Secretary of the Convention should read the first proposition from beginning to end, and that opportunity should be given for the Convention to pass upon each article of each chapter. I hope one chapter will be read at a time, and each article considered.

The PRESIDENT. A single preliminary question presents itself to the Chair. Although the Convention have provided that a resolve involving the merits of the Constitution, should have two separate readings, the Chair supposes that on this occasion that rule may be dispensed with. As in other cases where no objection is made, the Chair will consider that the rule is suspended by general consent, and will put the question on the final passage of the resolves.

Mr. LORD, of Salem. If we examine this new Constitution, I think we shall find cases where the Revising Committee, as a matter of necessity, doubtless, have altered the Constitution in relation to matters that the Convention has never passed upon. I will give, as an illustration, the removal of justices of the peace upon the address of the two Houses of the legislature. This Convention have passed upon that subject, and they have provided a different mode for the removal than by means of address. By the old Constitution there was not that power over justices of the peace, and yet the Revising Committee have given that power; and I submit that that is an amendment to the Constitution. I think it will turn out in quite a variety of instances, that the Constitution has been amended by the Revising Committee in parts which have not been acted on by the Convention.

The PRESIDENT. When the question is raised upon any point of that kind in its order, the Chair will rule upon it.

Mr. LORD. If they are real alterations of the Constitution, they certainly require two readings under the rule; and the question should not now be upon the final passage.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will take the direction of the Convention upon this question.

Mr. SCHOULER, of Boston. I desire to state, for the information of members, that those parts of the old Constitution which are unchanged, are printed in our copies “*lead*ed;” those parts which are entirely new are set “solid;” while those parts of old sections which have been changed are in italics.

Mr. SARGENT, of Cambridge. It would seem to me to be proper that the Secretary should read the resolves that have been passed by the Convention in connection with the provisions reported by the Revising Committee, in order that we may ascertain whether they have been correctly incorporated.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—BOUTWELL—LORD.

[August 1st.

The first resolve was then read, and the question stated upon its adoption.

Mr. BOUTWELL requested that the Preamble and Declaration of Rights, in the first chapter, might be read.

The PRESIDENT. The details of each chapter will be read and considered separately, before the Convention proceed to take the question upon them.

Mr. LORD. I think, before that is done, it will be most convenient to know upon what principle the Committee have separated several articles and placed them by themselves to be acted upon separately, while the bulk is to be acted upon together. If there is any principle upon which the Committee have acted, I desire to have the chairman state what that principle is, so that if, by the adoption of that principle, more propositions can be submitted separately than the Committee have reported, I think they should be so submitted. If, however, they have adopted a principle which includes some of these propositions which they have submitted separately, then such propositions should be included.

What I desire to know is, upon what principle it is that these seven particular and specific propositions are taken away from the body of the Constitution, and placed each by itself, and why the Constitution, otherwise, is put to the people in bulk? Of course, Sir, there must have been a reason for this, and that I want to get at.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman will allow the Chair to suggest that it would first be better to determine whether the Constitution, as reported by the Committee, should be read or not, and after that, the whole question opened by him will be before the Convention.

Mr. LORD. I was about to wait, but it was suggested by the gentleman for Berlin to take up the different parts separately.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that the question being submitted, upon the request of the gentleman for Berlin, upon the first proposition, that will be considered first. But the question immediately before us is, whether the Constitution shall be read. The Secretary will read that portion of the revised Constitution reported by the Committee, which is embraced in so much of their Report as is numbered "One."

Mr. BOUTWELL. I desire that it shall be read.

The Secretary accordingly proceeded to read, and read so much of the revised Constitution as is contained under the heads "Preamble," and "A Declaration of the Rights of the Inhabitants of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts," as follows:—

PREAMBLE.

The end of the institution, maintenance, and administration of government, is to secure the existence of the body politic; to protect it; and to furnish the individuals who compose it, with the power of enjoying, in safety and tranquillity, their natural rights and the blessings of life: and whenever these great objects are not obtained, the people have a right to alter the government, and to take measures necessary for their safety, prosperity and happiness.

The body politic is formed by a voluntary association of individuals; it is a social compact, by which the whole people covenants with each citizen, and each citizen with the whole people, that all shall be governed by certain laws for the common good. It is the duty of the people, therefore, in framing a Constitution of government, to provide for an equitable mode of making laws, as well as for an impartial interpretation, and a faithful execution of them, that every man may, at all times, find his security in them.

We, therefore, the people of Massachusetts, acknowledging, with grateful hearts, the goodness of the great Legislator of the universe, in affording us, in the course of his providence, an opportunity, deliberately and peaceably, without fraud, violence, or surprise, of entering into an original, explicit, and solemn compact with each other; and of forming a new Constitution of civil government for ourselves and posterity; and devoutly imploring his direction in so interesting a design, do agree upon, ordain, and establish, the following Declaration of Rights and Frame of Government, as the CONSTITUTION of the COMMONWEALTH of MASSACHUSETTS.

A DECLARATION

Of the Rights of the Inhabitants of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

ARTICLE 1. All men are born free and equal, and have certain natural, essential, and unalienable rights; among which may be reckoned the right of enjoying and defending their lives and liberties; that of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property; in fine, that of seeking and obtaining their safety and happiness.

ART. 2. It is the right as well as the duty of all men in society, publicly, and at stated seasons, to worship the SUPREME BEING, the great Creator and Preserver of the universe. And no subject shall be hurt, molested, or restrained, in his person, liberty, or estate, for worshipping God in the manner and season most agreeable to the dictates of his own conscience; or for his religious profession or sentiments; provided he doth not disturb the public peace, or obstruct others in their religious worship.

ART. 3. As the public worship of God, and instructions in piety, religion, and morality, promote the happiness and prosperity of a people, and the security of a republican government; therefore, the several religious societies of this Commonwealth, whether corporate or unincorporate, at any meeting legally warned and holden for that purpose, shall ever have the right to elect their pastors or religious teachers, to contract with them for their support, to raise money for erecting and repairing houses for public worship, for the maintenance of religious instruction, and for the payment of necessary expenses: And all persons belonging to any religious society shall be taken and held to be members, until they shall file with the clerk of such society a written notice declaring the dissolution of their membership, and thenceforth shall not be liable for any grant or contract which may be thereafter made or entered into by such society: And all religious sects and denominations, demeaning themselves peaceably, and as good citizens of the Commonwealth, shall be equally under the protection of the law; and no subordination of any one sect or denomination to another shall ever be established by law.

ART. 4. The people of this Commonwealth have the sole and exclusive right of governing themselves, as a free, sovereign, and independent State; and do, and forever hereafter shall, exercise and enjoy every power, jurisdiction, and right, which is not, or may not hereafter, be by them expressly delegated to the United States of America, in Congress assembled.

ART. 5. All power residing originally in the people, and being derived from them, the several magistrates and officers of government, vested with authority, whether legislative, executive, or judicial, are their substitutes and agents, and are at all times accountable to them.

ART. 6. No man, nor corporation, or association of men, have any other title to obtain advantages, or particular and exclusive privileges, distinct from those of the community, than what arises from the consideration of services rendered to the public; and this title being in nature neither hereditary, nor transmissible to children, or descendants, or relations by blood, the idea of a man being born a magistrate, lawgiver, or judge, is absurd and unnatural.

ART. 7. Government is instituted for the common good; for the protection, safety, prosperity, and happiness of the people; and not for the profit, honor, or private interest of any one man, family, or class of men: Therefore the people alone have an incontestable, unalienable, and indefeasible right to institute government; and to reform, alter, or totally change the same, when their protection, safety, prosperity and happiness require it.

ART. 8. In order to prevent those who are vested with authority from becoming oppressors, the people have a right, at such periods, and in such manner, as they shall establish by their frame of government, to cause their public officers to return to private life; and to fill up vacant places by certain and regular elections and appointments.

ART. 9. All elections ought to be free; and all the inhabitants of this Commonwealth, having such qualifications as they shall establish by their frame of government, have an equal right to elect officers, and to be elected, for public employments.

ART. 10. Each individual of the society has a right to be protected by it in the enjoyment of his life, liberty, and property, according to standing laws. He is obliged, consequently, to contribute his share to the expense of this protection; to give his personal service, or an equivalent, when necessary: but no part of the property of any individual can, with justice, be taken from him, or applied to public uses, without his own consent, or that of the representative body of the people. In fine, the people of this Commonwealth are not controllable by any other laws than those to which their constitutional representative body have given their consent. And whenever the public exigencies require that the property of any individual should be appropriated to public uses, he shall receive a reasonable compensation therefor.

ART. 11. Every subject of the Commonwealth ought to find a certain remedy, by having recourse to the laws, for all injuries or wrongs which he may receive in his person, property, or character. He ought to obtain right and justice freely, and without being obliged to purchase it; completely, and without any denial; promptly, and without delay; conformably to the laws.

ART. 12. The privilege and benefit of the writ of habeas corpus shall be enjoyed, in this Commonwealth, in the most free, easy, cheap, expeditious, and ample manner; and shall not be suspended by the legislature, except upon the most urgent and pressing occasions, and for a limited time not exceeding twelve months.

ART. 13. No subject shall be held to answer for any crimes or offence, until the same is fully and plainly, substantially and formally, described to him; or be compelled to accuse, or furnish evidence against himself: and every subject shall have a right to produce all proofs, that may be favorable to him; to meet the witnesses against him face to face, and to be fully heard in his defence by himself, or his counsel, at his election; and no subject shall be arrested, imprisoned, despoiled, or deprived of his property, immunities, or privileges, put out of the protection of the law, exiled, or deprived of his life, liberty, or estate, but by the judgment of his peers, or the law of the land. And the legislature shall not make any law that shall subject any person to a capital or infamous punishment, excepting for the government of the army and navy, without trial by jury.

ART. 14. In criminal prosecutions, the verification of facts in the vicinity where they happen, is one of the greatest securities of the life, liberty, and property of the citizen.

ART. 15. Every subject has a right to be se-

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION. — BOUTWELL — SCHOULER — HUBBARD — LORD.

[August 1st.

cure from all unreasonable searches and seizures of his person, his houses, his papers, and all his possessions. All warrants, therefore, are contrary to this right, if the cause or foundation of them be not previously supported by oath or affirmation; and if the order in the warrant to a civil officer, to make search in suspected places, or to arrest one or more suspected persons, or to seize their property, be not accompanied with a special designation of the persons or objects of search, arrest, or seizure; and no warrant ought to be issued but in cases, and with the formalities, prescribed by the laws.

ART. 16. In all controversies concerning property, and in all suits between two or more persons, except in cases in which it has heretofore been otherwise used and practised, the parties have a right to a trial by jury; and this method of procedure shall be held sacred, unless, in causes arising on the high seas, and such as relate to mariners' wages, the Legislature shall hereafter find it necessary to alter it.

ART. 17. The liberty of the press is essential to the security of freedom in a state: it ought not, therefore, to be restrained in this Commonwealth.

ART. 18. The people have a right to keep and to bear arms for the common defence; and, as in time of peace, armies are dangerous to liberty, they ought not to be maintained without the consent of the Legislature; and the military power shall always be held in an exact subordination to the civil authority, and be governed by it.

ART. 19. A frequent recurrence to the fundamental principles of the Constitution, and a constant adherence to those of piety, justice, moderation, temperance, industry, and frugality, are absolutely necessary to preserve the advantages of liberty, and to maintain a free government. The people ought, consequently, to have a particular attention to all those principles, in the choice of their officers and representatives; and they have a right to require of their lawgivers and magistrates, an exact and constant observance of them, in the formation and execution of the laws necessary for the good administration of the Commonwealth.

ART. 20. The people have a right, in an orderly and peaceable manner, to assemble to consult upon the common good; give instructions to their representatives; and to request of the legislative body, by the way of addresses, petitions, or remonstrances, redress of the wrongs done them, and of the grievances they suffer.

ART. 21. The power of suspending the laws, or the execution of the laws, ought never to be exercised but by the Legislature, or by authority derived from it, to be exercised in such particular cases only as the Legislature shall expressly provide for.

ART. 22. The freedom of deliberation, speech and debate, in either House of the Legislature, is so essential to the rights of the people, that it cannot be the foundation of any accusation or prosecution, action or complaint, in any other court or place whatsoever.

ART. 23. The Legislature ought frequently to assemble for the redress of grievances, for correcting, strengthening, and confirming the laws, and for making new laws, as the common good may require.

ART. 24. No subsidy, charge, tax, impost, or duties, ought to be established, fixed, laid, or levied, under any pretext whatsoever, without the consent of the people, or their representatives in the Legislature.

ART. 25. Laws made to punish for actions done before the existence of such laws, and which have not been declared crimes by preceding laws, are unjust, oppressive, and inconsistent with the fundamental principles of a free government.

ART. 26. No subject ought, in any case, or in any time, to be declared guilty of treason or felony by the Legislature.

ART. 27. No magistrate or court of law shall demand excessive bail or sureties, impose excessive fines, or inflict cruel or unusual punishments.

ART. 28. In time of peace, no soldier ought to be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner; and in time of war, such quarters ought not to be made but by the civil magistrate, in a manner ordained by the Legislature.

ART. 29. No person can in any case be subjected to law martial, or to any penalties or pains, by virtue of that law, except those employed in the army or navy, and except the militia in actual service, but by authority of the Legislature.

ART. 30. It is essential to the preservation of the rights of every individual, his life, liberty, property and character, that there be an impartial interpretation of the laws, and administration of justice. It is the right of every citizen to be tried by judges, as free, impartial and independent, as the lot of humanity will admit. It is therefore not only the best policy, but for the security of the rights of the people, and of every citizen, that the Judges of the Supreme Judicial Court should hold their offices by tenures established by the Constitution, and should have honorable salaries which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

ART. 31. In the government of this Commonwealth, the legislative department shall never exercise the executive and judicial powers, or either of them: the executive shall never exercise the legislative and judicial powers, or either of them: the judicial shall never exercise the legislative and executive powers, or either of them: to the end it may be a government of laws and not of men.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. The idea which I had in my mind when I introduced the Report, was this: that by general consent, we might go through with the Report of the Committee, chapter by chapter, and perfect it. If there are errors anywhere in the Report submitted by the Committee, they should be corrected as we go along from chapter to chapter, waiting, after the reading of each chapter, for such suggestions as gentlemen shall be pleased to make, the main question, all the while being upon the adoption of the proposition numbered "one." I am not desirous that the main question should be put until a fair chance shall have been given to every gentleman to express his opinion upon each and every individual thing in the revised Constitution.

Now, in regard to that portion which the Secretary has read, I may say that there are two changes only, in the Declaration of Rights. Article twelve of the Bill of Rights, by a vote of the Convention, found in Document No. 28, has been transferred from the sixth chapter of the present Constitution, being the chapter upon oaths and subscriptions, and made to constitute article twelve of the Bill of Rights, in precisely the same form.

In regard to the thirtieth article of the Declaration of Rights, some few changes have been made. Those are expressed in italics, and result from the change in the tenure of the judicial office, that being now during good behavior, but hereafter, by the tenure established by this Constitution, if adopted by the people, it will be ten years. Another change relates to the salaries of the judicial officers, and this provides, in accordance with the vote of the Convention, that they should have honorable salaries, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office. That change is placed here in direct conformity to the language of the resolve of the Convention, which the Committee took for their guide.

So far as I know, that is all that need to be said at present.

Mr. SCHOULER, of Boston. I move an amendment to the fifteenth article of the Bill of Rights.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to know whether there is a general consent that the Preamble and Bill of Rights, which have been read, shall be considered by themselves?

Mr. HUBBARD, of Boston. I rise, Mr. President, to object to that course. It seems to me that there is a preliminary question which should first be disposed of. If the Convention determine or shall determine to put each proposition to the people separate and distinct from each other, and by itself, then this work of revising these amendments of the Constitution, becomes wholly superfluous. I suppose the question of the gentleman from Salem, (Mr. Lord,) a short time since, tended to the presentation of that preliminary question, that we might know upon what principle this Report has been made. I supposed that after the Preamble and Declaration of Rights should have been read, we should have had some explanation of that principle from some member of the Committee who had in charge this work of revising and putting the amendments and the Constitution in form.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to state that there is no rule of the Convention which justifies the Chair in stating the question as has been proposed by the gentleman representing Berlin, (Mr. Boutwell). The question is upon so much of the Report as is numbered "one," and upon so much of the Constitution as is covered by that part of the Report.

Mr. HUBBARD. I object to the subject being considered in the way which has been suggested by the gentleman who represents Berlin, until after the Convention shall have decided and determined in what form they intend to send the Constitution out to the people.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Boston will see that, after entering upon the debate of this first, if the previous question should be moved, and the main question should be ordered to be put, there will be no opportunity of perfecting the different propositions, covered by the other resolves, in the way of amendments. It is to avoid that difficulty that the Chair suggests the unanimous consent of the Convention to the consideration of the Report in the manner indicated by the gentleman representing Berlin.

Mr. LORD, of Salem. The resolve numbered "one" covers the entire Constitution, unamended, as well as amended.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the first resolve covers so much of the Constitution reported by the Committee, as extends to and includes the article upon the revision and amendments of the Constitution, and which covers the first thirty-eight pages of the printed Report.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. I believe it is a rule of this Convention, that any member may call for a division of the question. I did call for that division, in such a manner that the question can be taken upon that part of the Report which is numbered "one." But the gentleman from Salem is debating a question not now before us.

The PRESIDENT. The first question is upon agreeing to the first proposition in the first resolve.

Mr. LORD. I understand the Chair to have ruled that the first question is upon the first resolve, and that if the previous question should now be moved, the question would have to be taken upon the first resolve as a whole, which, as I said before, embraces nearly the whole Constitution which we intend to put forth to the people; all except some seven short, distinct propositions, which this Committee recommend to be submitted as separate questions, but which occupy only two pages out of the forty of this printed Report.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION. — LORD — SCHOULER — BOUTWELL.

[August 1st.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair stated, or intended to state, that the question is upon the first proposition of the first resolve.

Mr. LORD. That being so, Sir, I like the form of proceeding suggested by the gentleman representing Berlin, (Mr. Boutwell,) very well, but at the same time it seems to me that as a preliminary question, we ought to find out in the first place the principle upon which the Report of the Committee is based, to see whether we are willing to adopt that proposition, and whether the Report is in accordance with that principle which they have adopted in making it. We ought to be informed why they have separated from the body of the Constitution these seven specific subjects, which form the end of their Report, to be submitted separately to the people, in preference to other subjects? Why they chose to report that seven particular subjects, rather than any seven other, should be separately considered by the people? Of course that has been done upon some principle, as we are not to suppose that the Committee acted without some general principle to guide them. There must have been a reason for selecting these seven, rather than seven other, and I desire to know what that reason is. If the gentleman will tell us what that principle of action is, it may be one which will commend itself to the judgment of the entire Convention. It may be also that in laying down the principle, the Convention will discover that certain of the propositions which are placed in the body of the Constitution by the Committee, and which are not in the present Constitution, ought to be placed in separate articles, and submitted separately to the people.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to know whether there is any objection to the consideration of the Bill of Rights by way of amendments?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHOULER, of Boston. I ask whether it is in order to move to insert the words which are contained under head "four" of the Report of the Committee, and which are placed there to be submitted to the people separately, in the article of the Bill of Rights to which it refers, viz.: that concerning excessive bail and fines? Whether it is not competent for, and in the power of the Convention to make that article of the Bill of Rights complete, and send it out to the people complete? If such an amendment is in order, I move it.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the motion is not in order, as that question is not before the Convention. The question is upon the Declaration of Rights.

Mr. SCHOULER. My wish is, to amend the Declaration of Rights, by making the subject to which I have referred a part of the twenty-seventh article of the Bill of Rights. The words which I propose to transfer to the Bill of Rights are these, which are found under head "four" of the Report of the Committee:—

No person shall be imprisoned for any debt hereafter contracted, unless in cases of fraud.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair misapprehended the motion of the gentleman. The motion is in order.

Mr. SCHOULER. Then I make that motion.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. I have but a very few words to say in reference to the motion of the gentleman from Boston (Mr. Schouler). It is, of course, well known to the Convention, that our Constitution, bearing date in 1780, has been subjected to many important amendments—some thirteen in all—from that period down to this time. The consequence of the adoption of these amendments is, that many parts which stand in the Constitution, and are printed with it, have been annulled. Now, then, the chief object of the Committee was to present to this Convention, and to the people of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, a systematic form of government; that it should contain the principle contained in the system established in 1780; and that, moreover, it should be, so far as it was to be considered as a machine, a perfect machine. Having, therefore, proceeded with that view, we took what remained of the original Constitution of 1780, what remained of the amendments adopted since 1780, and such of the resolutions which have been adopted by this Convention as were essential to the harmonious operation of the system of government which we proposed to establish. We considered that one great object to be obtained by this Convention, was to give to the people of this Commonwealth an intelligible and systematic organic law; and therefore, to carry out that purpose, we have been obliged to depart from that principle which we desired in the outset to recognize and act upon, and that was, that this Convention should allow the people of the Commonwealth to express a distinct opinion upon every separate proposition. But we found that this was absolutely impossible. We stand to-day very much in the condition of a people establishing anew a system of government. Therefore, then, we have placed in proposition number "one," all that portion of the Constitution of 1780 which remains, the subsequent amendments, and so much and many of the resolutions adopted by this Convention as were necessary to perfect and make harmonious and systematic the government which we propose to establish.

Now, then, upon the principle that it is practicable to allow the people to express an opinion separately, upon matters not essential to the harmony of the system of government, we have submitted to this Convention, and upon their judgment they are to submit to the people, certain separate propositions upon which the public sentiment is divided. Those propositions may be either rejected or adopted, without disturbing, in any degree, the harmony of the system of government which we have here contained in proposition "one."

Now, in regard to this proposition, it is not necessary to the working of the government. We have passed such a resolution. It may be that a majority of the people of the Commonwealth are in favor of it; but they have a right to express an independent opinion upon it, because it is not one which is essential to the system of government which we have here. That, I think, could not be said with equal justice of any provision which the Committee have incorporated into proposition number "one."

Therefore, acting upon that rule, we decided to present to the Convention, and through them to the people, the different propositions which are contained under the heads marked from "one" to "eight," inclusive. Number "one" containing the general system of government, and numbers from "two" to "eight," inclusive, containing independent propositions which may be separately submitted to the people. If rejected, the system of government is not disturbed; if adopted, they become incorporated into the Constitution. The government goes on either way.

Therefore, it was the judgment of the Committee that, under the circumstances, it was a part of their duty to submit a systematic form of government to the people, perfect in itself, and then, independent questions, which, if the judgment of the people shall be found to be in favor of them, will become a part of the Constitution; and which, if lost, will cause no disturbance of the system. It is upon such grounds that we have made the Report.

Mr. SCHOULER, of Boston. I understand the argument of the gentleman for Berlin to be, that these seven different propositions are to be left out of the Constitution, and are to be given to the people separately to vote upon them; and if the majority of the people agree to them, or to either one of them, then those which are agreed to, become a part of the Constitution; and his ground seems to be, that they can be left out of the Constitution, and still the Constitution will be a perfect and full declaration of rights, and the proper fundamental law of the Commonwealth. Now, Sir, I will ask that gentleman, and the members of this Convention, why some of these articles—and particularly the fifth one, concerning imprisonment for debt—should be left out in this way, when at the same time we find in the next chapter, upon the general court, it is stated in article third, that the "compensation of members of the general court shall be established by standing laws; but no act increasing the compensation shall apply to the general court which passes such act; and no compensation shall be allowed for attendance of members at any one session for a longer time than one hundred days."

Suppose that was struck out of the Constitution, and the Constitution should remain just as it is, leaving the legislature to sit as long as they have a mind to, and to fix their own pay as they have done ever since 1780. Is that not as distinct and separate a proposition to be submitted to the people, as the article in relation to imprisonment for debt, or the article in relation to habeas corpus, which are both left out? Here is another provision in article six, declaring that the "general court shall have power to make laws regulating marriage, divorce and alimony, but shall in no case decree a divorce, or hear and determine any causes touching the validity of the marriage contract." Suppose that was left out, what harm would be done? Sir, that is a new feature in the Constitution which is reported here; and I will ask gentlemen of the Convention why these should be considered as of so much consequence as to go into the Constitution, while that in regard to imprisonment for debt is left out? It seems to me, that the Constitution, in relation to that part of our legislative power, would be just as perfect if these were left out, and it should remain in the same way that it has remained ever since 1780. A little farther on we find article thirteen, in the same chapter, which says: "In all elections by the general court, or either branch thereof, a majority of votes shall be required, and the members shall vote viva voce ." This is considered of so much importance that it is put into the Constitution, while the provisions in regard to the right of habeas corpus, and imprisonment for debt, and other matters, are left out. I can see no principle in this thing; and I think, if we want to strengthen the Constitution, we had better put this provision about imprisonment for debt into it. I do not desire to occupy the time of the Convention, and so I will close by saying that I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION. — BOUTWELL — LORD — KELLOGG.

[August 1st.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. I have not a word to say about the amendment; but we should consider, that if this Constitution is adopted, it ought to be as perfect an instrument as possible. Suppose it should be adopted as it stands, excepting that the third article of the chapter on the general court should be left out; we should then have no provision in the Constitution, of any sort, in reference to the compensation of members, unless we put the Constitution in such a form as we shall have to do, if we follow the suggestions of the gentleman from Boston, that only those parts of the existing form of government shall be annulled, which are inconsistent with what we propose. The consequence will be, that this will lead us to a position upon which no government can stand. That provision of the existing Constitution will be found on page 80, and is as follows: "The expenses of travelling to the general assembly, and returning home once in every session, and no more, shall be paid by the government out of the public treasury," &c. If you annul only those things in the existing Constitution, which are not in the new one, what does it bring with it? It brings with it the necessity of going to the Constitution of 1780, and examining all the subsequent provisions of constitutional law; and then it all depends upon the construction. In regard to the provision respecting legislative power over alimony and divorce, if you pass your Constitution in such a way as to annul all the existing provisions, and this should be put separately and rejected, you would have no power to pass laws regulating the proceedings in relation to divorce and alimony. Are you prepared to do that? If you pursued the other course, and allowed all to remain that is not inconsistent with the new action, then comes up the third article of the Constitution in reference to the judiciary power, that they may regulate proceedings with regard to divorce and alimony, unless the legislature shall otherwise order. The consequence of this mode of proceeding will be, that you will have two Constitutions in existence at the same time, and every man will have to go to the Constitution of 1780, and to all the subsequent amendments, and analyze them, to see whether they are consistent with the new one. Therefore, I say that we must put into the new Constitution what is necessary to make the system perfect, and stand upon that. The rest is of little consequence.

Mr. LORD, of Salem. If the gentleman stands upon that ground, and puts into the Constitution as a whole, just exactly what is necessary, in order to make a perfectly complete system of government, and just enough to make his machine work well, I want to know why he has not separated all these new propositions which are not necessary, in order to enable the instrument to be a perfect instrument. Why has he not allowed the voters of this Commonwealth to pass distinctly upon such questions as do not go to make up a perfect system of government? I will give him an example. I will take the proposition which is incorporated into the Constitution, of the secret ballot, and I will ask, why did he not put the secret ballot as a separate proposition? Cannot the government work, and is not the machine a perfect instrument, without the secret ballot in it? If they were to be chosen by ballot, as the old Constitution provides, does it not stand well enough, without having the secret ballot put in? Cannot that stand as an independent proposition, just as well as imprisonment for debt? I want to have gentlemen show me how it happens, while we have been living here seventy years under this government, and have got along pretty well, and all that time have not had this provision—how does it happen that there is now such an essential necessity for the introduction of this principle into the Constitution? What I want to find out, is, whether there is any distinct principle within which this Report of the Committee falls. It seems to me that it does not fall within any principle at all. Suppose it is submitted to the people, whether the judicial tenure should be changed, I want to know whether that cannot be put as a distinct proposition to the people? I do not see anything to prevent that from being done; and so, Sir, I do not know why any one of these seven articles is any less necessary than the several articles of the Bill of Rights. If I understand the ground upon which the gentleman's argument is put, it is exactly this: that there is nothing in this first proposition, occupying thirty-eight pages, which is not essential to the operation of government. Does not the gentleman for Berlin say, that there is nothing in these thirty-eight pages, that is not essential in order to make the machine operate?

Mr. BOUTWELL. It is undoubtedly true, that there are some things in these propositions which might be submitted separately. For instance, we have decided that a quorum in the Senate shall be twenty-one, and of the House one hundred. There is a distinct proposition, no doubt, which can be submitted to the people. We have also provided, that the judicial tenure shall be ten years, and to stand during good behavior; that is a distinct proposition; but, suppose you leave out of the Constitution which you intend to submit to the people, all reference to a quorum of the Senate, and all reference to a quorum of the House of Representatives, and you do not establish the judicial tenure one way or the other—you submit them to the people as independent propositions, and what is the result? If the people vote that the quorum of the Senate shall not be twenty-one, the quorum of the Senate under the old Constitution is sixteen. If they vote that the quorum of the House shall not be one hundred, then you have no quorum unless you revive the old Constitution, and have it sixty. But in case you revive the old Constitution, the difficulty to which I have referred, presents itself. It is undoubtedly true, that many propositions could be submitted separately, but yet, in order to make the different parts harmonious, it is better to submit them together.

Mr. LORD. Let me call the gentleman's attention to chapter fourteen articles first and second, in relation to future revision and amendments of the Constitution; why could not that be put separately?

Mr. BOUTWELL. We have already, in the existing Constitution, an article in reference to amendments to the Constitution, and we have deemed it one subject, as we have that of elections. We have three separate provisions in regard to elections, but we have thought it expedient and proper, in order to make it harmonious, to have one chapter, where all in our fundamental law upon that subject, might be found, and we have framed a chapter accordingly. So with regard to amendments of the Constitution. If you proceed to analyze the Constitution in that way, the result will be that we shall have so many propositions to submit to the people, that, after all, the system will be exceedingly unintelligible. There are some propositions which are entirely disconnected with the Constitution, and which may be submitted independently, without essentially affecting the Constitution one way or the other. That, I think, will be the case with every one of these seven articles; if they are rejected, the people are not confused—if they are adopted, the people are not confused.

Mr. LORD. I understand the explanation of the gentleman for Berlin, to be this: Although the proposition in reference to the secret ballot, which I have pointed out, is one of those amendments which are of a nature that they can be submitted separately, and yet, inasmuch as the same subject matter is in the Constitution, it is desirable to have all upon the same subject incorporated together. In order that the people may more readily understand it, all on one subject should be put in one chapter, and submitted together. Now, the thought accidentally occurred to my mind, that it was a little singular why he did not apply the principle to the twelfth article of the Bill of Rights, where the subject treated of is the right of habeas corpus; why is not his proposition, numbered two, which relates to that very subject, put into the twelfth article, instead of being placed at the end, as a proposition by itself? I want to find out, if I can, whether there is any principle that will cover the whole Report.

The question being upon the motion of Mr. Schouler which was, to annex to the twenty-seventh article of the Bill of Rights, the following words, contained under head "five" of the Report of the Committee, viz.: "No person shall be imprisoned for any debt hereafter contracted, unless in cases of fraud," it was put, and decided in the negative.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Hadley. I move to amend the fourth article of the Bill of Rights, which is as follows:—

The people of this Commonwealth have the sole and exclusive right of governing themselves, as a free, sovereign, and independent State; and do, and forever hereafter shall, exercise and enjoy every power, jurisdiction, and right, which is not, or may not hereafter, be by them expressly delegated to the United States of America, in Congress assembled, by striking out the three last words, "in Congress assembled."

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the proposition is not in order.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION. — HALLETT — HATHAWAY — JENKS — PLUNKETT.

[August 1st.

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham. It seems to me to be important to settle here, the rules of order upon which we are to proceed, before we advance any farther, in order that we may know how and by what we are to be governed. For instance, the subject upon which the gentleman from Hadley proposes an amendment, was a subject considered in the Committee, and reported against by the Committee on the Bill of Rights. Therefore, the subject has been considered in Committee, has been reported upon, or rather not reported upon, which is equivalent to recommending no change in it, and has so passed through its various stages in the Convention. Now, the question arises upon the Report of a Committee, which is merely a Committee to draft the form of a Constitution—to reduce the resolves of the Convention to the best form and language which would express the meaning and intent of the resolves. The question arises here, at this stage, whether the Constitution is open to amendment upon those topics which have been submitted to a Committee and acted upon; and then, secondly, whether it is open to amendment upon topics which had not been submitted to a Committee. In my judgment, in neither case can it be done. If it should be considered in order, there are a number of amendments which I should propose; for instance, as to giving the legislature the power to establish martial law. With the view of having this matter determined, I submit these remarks; that we may understand our position, and settle, in limine, the question, and thereby we shall be released from great difficulty and delay.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the amendment of the gentleman from Hadley is not in order, inasmuch as it reverses the action of the Convention.

Mr. HATHAWAY, of Freetown. I do not rise for the purpose of taking an appeal from the decision of the Chair, by no means; but merely to ask for information through the Chair. I suppose, Sir, that it was the duty of the Committee, which have made this Report, under the order for their appointment, to revise and report to the Convention, for their consideration, the amendments which had been proposed and adopted by the Convention to the Constitution. The Committee have made the Report which we have before us, and what is it? They have embraced not only the amendments, I am free to say, but the whole provisions of the Constitution, as it has heretofore existed, together with the amendments which have been made since 1780, and are now in force. If all this is proposed here as an amendment, I submit whether the proposition of the gentleman from Hadley is not a correct one; that is, to make an amendment to this amendment? If it be not an amendment, then I submit the question as to the power of the Committee to report as they have. The resolution by which that Committee was directed to be appointed, as I have it from the Secretary, is in these words:—

Ordered, That a Committee of ——— members be appointed to reduce such amendments as have been, or may be agreed upon, to the form in which it is proper to submit the same to the people for ratification.

It evidently only applies it to such amendments as we have made to the Constitution, and not to a substituted Constitution.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Freetown raises a different question from that raised by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Hadley. If the gentleman proposes his question as a question of order, the Chair will rule upon it.

Mr. HATHAWAY. My question is, whether this Report of the Committee is embraced within the meaning of the word "amendments," as used in the order by virtue of which the Committee was appointed, under date of June twenty-first? If it be embraced in the meaning of that word, then I submit that the proposition of the gentleman from Hadley is a correct one, and in order. If it be not embraced, then I submit whether the Committee have not superseded their authority?

The PRESIDENT. The question raised by the gentleman it is not competent for the Convention to settle at this time, as the question now under consideration is the Declaration of Rights—that is, under the unanimous consent of the Convention. If the gentleman presents any case in reference to the Bill of Rights, where the Committee have transcended their authority, the Chair will decide it.

Mr. JENKS, of Boston. Is it in order to offer an amendment to the Bill of Rights?

The PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. JENKS. I move, then, to add to the twenty-fifth article of the Bill of Rights, which is as follows:—

Laws made to punish for actions done before the existence of such laws, and which have not been declared crimes by preceding laws, are unjust, oppressive, and inconsistent with the fundamental principles of a free government.

The following words:—

No person shall be imprisoned for any cause, not declared by law to be criminal, or dangerous to the public safety.

If this amendment is adopted, it will supersede the provision under head "five," upon the same subject, though in different language.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the amendment not in order at this time, as it is only competent to amend in matters before the Convention, and that in form, and not in substance.

Mr. PLUNKETT, of Adams. I move to amend article thirteenth of the Bill of Rights, by adding thereto what the Committee have placed under head "three," with a view of a separate submission thereof to the people, and which is in the following words:—

In all trials for criminal offences, the jury, after having received the instruction of the court, shall have the right, in their verdict, of guilty, or not guilty, to determine the law and the facts of the case, but it shall be the duty of the court to superintend the course of the trials, to decide upon the admission and rejection of evidence, and upon all questions of law raised during the trials, and upon all collateral and incidental proceedings; and also to allow bills of exceptions. And the court may grant a new trial in case of conviction.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

No farther amendments being offered to the Bill of Rights, the Secretary then read the first chapter of the Frame of Government, as follows:

ARTICLE 1. The department of legislation shall be styled the General Court of Massachusetts.

It shall consist of two branches, a Senate and a House of Representatives, each of which shall have a negative upon the other.

ART. 2. The political year shall begin on the first Wednesday in January; and the General Court shall assemble every year, on the said first Wednesday in January, and shall be dissolved on the day next preceding the first Wednesday in January following, without any proclamation or other act of the Governor. But nothing herein contained shall prevent the General Court from assembling at such other times as they shall judge necessary, or when called together by the Governor.

ART. 3. The compensation of members of the General Court shall be established by standing laws; but no act increasing the compensation shall apply to the General Court which passes such act; and no compensation shall be allowed for attendance of members at any one session, for a longer time than one hundred days.

ART. 4. No bill or resolve of the Senate or House of Representatives shall become a law, and have force as such, until it shall have been laid before the Governor for his revision; and if he, upon such revision, approve thereof, he shall signify his approbation by signing the same. But if he have any objection to the passing of such bill or resolve, he shall return the same, together with his objections thereto, in writing, to the Senate or House of Representatives, in whichsoever the same shall have originated; who shall enter the objections sent down by the Governor, at large, on their records, and proceed to reconsider the said bill or resolve; but if, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of the said Senate or House of Representatives, present, shall, notwithstanding the said objections, agree to pass the same, it shall, together with the objections, be sent to the other branch of the Legislature, where it shall also be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of the members present, shall have the force of a law; but, in all such cases, the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays; and the names of the persons voting for, or against, the said bill or resolve, shall be entered upon the public records of the Commonwealth.

And in order to prevent unnecessary delays, if any bill or resolve shall not be returned by the Governor, within five days after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall have the force of a law.

But if any bill or resolve shall be objected to and not approved by the Governor, and if the General Court shall adjourn within five days after the same shall have been laid before the Governor for his approbation, and thereby prevent his returning it, with his objections, as provided by the Constitution, such bill or resolve shall not become a law, nor have force as such.

ART. 5. The General Court shall forever have full power and authority to erect and constitute judicatories and courts of record, or other courts, to be held in the name of the Commonwealth, for the hearing, trying, and determining of all manner of crimes, offences, pleas, processes, plaints, actions, matters, causes, and things, whatsoever, arising or happening within the Commonwealth, or between or concerning persons inhabiting, or residing, or brought within the same; whether the same be criminal or civil, or whether the said crimes be capital or not capital, and whether the said pleas be real, personal, or mixed; and for the awarding and making out of execution thereupon: to which courts and judicatories are hereby given and granted full power and authority, from time to time, to administer oaths or affirmations, for the better discovery of truth in any matter in controversy, or depending before them.

ART. 6. The General Court shall have power to make laws regulating marriage, divorce, and alimony, but shall in no case decree a divorce, or hear and determine any causes touching the validity of the marriage contract.

ART. 7. And farther, full power and authority are hereby given and granted to the said

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—LORD—BOUTWELL—DANA.

[August 1st.

General Court, from time to time, to make, ordain, and establish, all manner of wholesome and reasonable orders, laws, statutes, and ordinances, directions, and instructions, either with penalties or without; so as the same be not repugnant or contrary to this Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of this Commonwealth, and for the government and ordering thereof, and of the subjects of the same, and for the necessary support and defence of the government thereof; and to name and settle annually, or provide, by fixed laws, for the naming and settling all civil officers within the said Commonwealth, the election and constitution of whom are not hereafter in this form of government otherwise provided for; and to set forth the several duties, powers, and limits, of the several civil and military officers of this Commonwealth, and the forms of such oaths or affirmations as shall be respectively administered unto them for the execution of their several offices and places, so as the same be not repugnant or contrary to this Constitution; and to impose and levy proportional and reasonable assessments, rates, and taxes, upon all the inhabitants of, and persons resident, and estates lying within the said Commonwealth; and also to impose, and levy, reasonable duties and excises upon any produce, goods, wares, merchandise, and commodities, whatsoever, brought into, produced, manufactured, or being within the same; to be issued and disposed of by warrant, under the hand of the Governor of this Commonwealth, for the time being, with the advice and consent of the Council, for the public service, in the necessary defence and support of the government of the said Commonwealth, and the protection and preservation of the subjects thereof, according to such acts as are or shall be in force within the same.

ART. 8. The General Court shall have full power and authority to erect and constitute municipal or city governments in any corporate town or towns in this Commonwealth, and to grant to the inhabitants thereof such powers, privileges, and immunities, not repugnant to the Constitution, as the General Court shall deem necessary or expedient for the regulation and government thereof, and to prescribe the manner of calling and holding public meetings of the inhabitants, in wards or otherwise, for the election of officers under the Constitution, and the manner of returning the votes given at such meetings: provided, that no such government shall be erected or constituted in any town not containing twelve thousand inhabitants; nor unless it be with the consent and on the application of a majority of the inhabitants of such town, present and voting thereon, pursuant to a vote at a meeting duly warned and holden for that purpose: and provided, also, that all by-laws, made by such municipal or city government, shall be subject, at all times, to be annulled by the General Court.

ART. 9. Each branch of the General Court shall have authority to punish, by imprisonment, every person, not one of its members, who shall be guilty of disrespect thereto, by any disorderly or contemptuous behavior, in its presence; or who, in the town or city where the General Court is sitting, and during the time of its sitting, shall threaten harm to the body or estate of any of its members, or assault any of them for anything said or done in its session; or shall assault, or arrest, any witness, or other person, ordered to attend it, in his way in going, or returning; or who shall rescue any person arrested by its order: provided, that no imprisonment, on its warrant or order, for either of the above described offences, shall be for a term exceeding thirty days; and the Governor and Council shall have the same authority to punish in like cases. And no member, during his going to, returning from, or attending, the General Court, shall be arrested, or held to bail, on mesne process.

ART. 10. Each branch of the General Court may try, and determine all cases where their rights, and privileges are concerned, and which, by the Constitution, they have authority to try and determine, by committees of their own members, or in such other way as they may respectively think best.

ART. 11. Each branch shall be the final judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications, of its members, as pointed out in the Constitution; shall choose a presiding officer from among its members; appoint its other officers; settle its rules and orders of proceeding, and shall have power to adjourn: provided, such adjournment shall not exceed three days at a time.

ART. 12. And whereas the elections appointed to be made by this Constitution, on the first Wednesday in January annually, by the two Houses of the Legislature, may not be completed on that day, the said elections may be adjourned, from day to day, until the same shall be completed.

ART. 13. In all elections by the General Court, or either branch thereof, a majority of votes shall be required, and the members shall vote visa voce.

ART. 14. The enacting style, in making and passing all acts, statutes, and laws, shall be: BE IT ENACTED BY THE GENERAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. LORD, of Salem, asked the reading of the resolution of the Convention which authorized the change in article four.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. I suppose the gentleman refers to the word "present" which has been inserted in that article. A part of the article, including the word "present," inserted in italics, reads as follows:—

But if he have any objection to the passing of such bill or resolve, he shall return the same, together with his objections thereto, in writing, to the Senate or House of Representatives, in whichsoever the same shall have originated; who shall enter the objections sent down by the Governor, at large, on their records, and proceed to reconsider the said bill or resolve; but if, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of the said Senate or House of Representatives, present, shall, notwithstanding the said objections, agree to pass the same, it shall, together with the objections, be sent to the other branch of the Legislature, where it shall also be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of the members present, shall have the force of a law.

Now, Sir, of course under the order of the Convention, the Committee thought that some little discretion was allowed them; and I have in my mind a fact within the knowledge of the gentleman from Salem himself, which assures me that I was not alone in that opinion. If the Convention will be kind enough to read from the word "present," in italics, to the close of the article, they will see that the word "present" is used in the present Constitution in reference to one branch of the legislature, and not in reference to the other. Therefore, it being declared in the original article that two-thirds of the "members present" in one case, and there being no declaration in regard to the other, the Committee thought it within the rule, for the purpose of consistency, in the administration of the government in that respect, to introduce the word "present." That is the idea the Committee had, and, of course, it is for the Convention to decide whether the Committee went beyond their authority in introducing this word.

Mr. LORD. Then I understand from the chairman of the Committee, that this alteration is made without any vote of the Convention. The old Constitution requires that when a bill shall receive the veto of the governor, it shall, in the first place, be sent to the House in which it originated, and be passed by two-thirds of that body, not of those who happen to be present at the time, but by two-thirds of that body in which the bill originated. This amendment, which this Convention has not voted nor acted upon, provides that two-thirds of a bare quorum may pass a bill, notwithstanding there may not be even a majority present, and notwithstanding the number may be less than the number that ordinarily votes in favor of an amendment.

I merely call the attention of the Convention to this matter, because it is a palpable alteration of the Constitution, by the Committee, without the authority of any action of the Convention in its favor, for there has been no action of the Convention upon it.

Now, I suppose the Committee went the whole length of its powers, when they reported the old Constitution, where it remains unaltered, when under the authority to report amendments, it reported what were not amendments; but it seems to me to be transcending their powers, to report as an amendment what the Convention have not at all acted upon. The question now is, not whether it ought to be so, but whether we have made it so.

Mr. DANA, for Manchester. I would state, in addition to the reasons stated by the gentleman who represents Berlin, for the action of the Committee, that we understood, and understand now, that the practice has been, to consider this article four, as requiring only two-thirds of the members present, in either branch of the legislature. So that, by this amendment, we not only make the rule uniform, but make it conform to the uniform practice heretofore.

Mr. LORD. Will the gentlemen of the Committee inform us in what cases any resolve has passed either branch by two-thirds of those present, where that was not two-thirds of the whole?

Mr. DANA. I do not know, of my own knowledge, that there had been anything actually passed by such a two-third vote, but I have been told, on good authority, that such has been regarded to be the rule. It has always been so considered. I cannot mention any vetoed bill that has actually passed the House, in which it originated, by a two-thirds vote, when that vote was not two-thirds of the whole. On consulting with persons learned in the practice of the legislature, Presidents and Speakers, I learned that such had been the understanding, and such the action of the House of Representatives. Whether the question has ever come under the adjudication of the courts, I do not know.

Mr. LORD. Has there ever been any case, in which a bill has passed the branch of the legislature to which it was returned, and declared passed, with less than two-thirds of that branch voting in its favor? Because, if there has been, it is a precedent in favor of our adopting this as a rule. But if there has not been, I am entitled to my own construction of the Constitution, until the supreme court have ruled it, or until the people have changed it; and I submit, that this Committee cannot put their construction upon language, and base an amendment upon that construction, and say that it means two-thirds of those present, without deciding whether it means those present and voting, or not. I do not believe there is a precedent to that effect, because the only bill I ever knew pass through the House,

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION. — BOUTWELL — LORD — BUTLER — HILLARD — JENKS — LIVERMORE.

[August 1st.

against the governor's veto, was the proposition to increase the members' pay, and that passed by a good deal more than two-thirds of the whole number.

Some gentleman suggests to me that the bill establishing the Boston Wharf Company passed so. My impression is, that when it was vetoed, it failed, and was brought up again the next year.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It passed the same year.

Mr. LORD. But did it pass by less than two-thirds of the body to which it was returned? To which body was it returned?

Mr. BOUTWELL. To the Senate.

Mr. LORD. The gentleman says it was returned to the Senate, and being returned to the Senate I suppose that gentleman can tell me whether it obtained twenty-seven members of that body in its favor, because it must have obtained the votes of that number in order to have had two-thirds of that body? If it did, then it is a precedent.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Salem, (Mr. Lord,) to a very palpable alteration in the same article, which I commend to his deliberate judgment, because that has never received the judicial interpretation of the supreme court. He will find it in the last line but one on the ninth page, in the following language:—

And in order to prevent unnecessary delays, if any bill or resolve shall not be returned by the Governor, within five days after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall have the force of a law.

The words "to him" are very evidently inserted. Now, the supreme court have never decided judicially upon that point, as I am aware of; and I should like to know by what authority the Committee put in those words?

Mr. LORD. I do not believe that the Committee have any right to put in the words "to him," for I think if a governor, to avoid having a bill presented to him for his signature, should undertake to take himself out of the State for five days, and the bill should be presented at the council-chamber, that would be a sufficient presentation to him. I do not believe in the Revising Committee undertaking to amend the Constitution. If it is proper that the Constitution should be amended, it should be amended by the Convention.

Mr. BUTLER. The Convention are now about doing it, as I understand it. That is what we are after; if not, we had better go home. We are about adopting these suggestions.

Mr. LORD. If the gentleman from Lowell is right, I withdraw my request for the reading of the resolution. I understood the ruling of the Chair to be that no amendment of the Constitution which affected the substance of the Constitution, and which had not been passed upon by the Convention heretofore, would be in order. If these are amendments to the Constitution, and if they have not been passed upon, they are not in order now.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Salem raises the question of order whether the Committee have transcended their authority. That question has not heretofore been raised.

Mr. BUTLER. I am of the opinion that there has been a uniform construction in regard to this matter. Let us take an illustration. The gentleman from Salem supposes that the governor might be sick or he would not be found within five days; or he might have broken his leg and be confined to his room at New Bedford, and then if a bill or resolve was presented for five days to his empty chair in the council-chamber when it was known that the governor would not be there, it would have the effect of law.

Mr. LORD. By our provisions the lieutenant-governor is acting governor under such circumstances.

Mr. BUTLER. I am talking about it as it was. The lieutenant-governor was not governor, and that is another provision that we have changed. But in these cases where a certain construction has been given to language by usage, the Committee have not changed the matter in substance; they have only made use of good language and good forms to express just exactly what it meant before. In this case, there is not a man here who supposes that an absolute majority of two-thirds was required. It is easy for the gentleman to ask how the vote stood, when neither he nor anybody else here knows how it stood. I will put the question to him, whether he knows himself.

Mr. LORD. I am going to see.

Mr. BUTLER. When the gentleman finds out, I shall be glad to hear the result. But when the gentleman asks questions that he cannot answer himself, it puts me in mind of an old proverb which says that a certain class of persons may ask questions which a philosopher cannot answer. [Laughter.] My rule is, if I do not know the truth of the case, to hold my peace. But I think we might as well meet this, once for all—Have the Committee transcended their power? If they have, we shall have to send their Report back to them, and in the course of some weeks or months we may perhaps get a new Report.

Mr. HILLARD, of Boston. I wish to ask for information, although I shall, perhaps, come in the category of those who ask questions that cannot be answered, whether the change of "three days" in the last line of article eleven has been adopted by the Convention.

Mr. LORD. I will state that I have been informed that the bill by which the Boston Wharf Company increased its capital, passed by twenty-four to seven—being two-thirds of those present, and not two-thirds of the Senate. No one raised any objection.

Mr. JENKS, of Boston. I will call attention to the proviso in article eight, which is as follows:—

Provided, That no such government shall be erected or constituted in any town not containing twelve thousand inhabitants; nor unless it be with the consent and on the application of a majority of the inhabitants of such town, present and voting thereon, pursuant to a vote at a meeting duly warned and holden for that purpose.

It seems to me that there is a great inconsistency in requiring that any town in order to become a city should have twelve thousand inhabitants; and more than six thousand would be required to vote for it, if I understand it right.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. The gentleman will perceive, if he notices the type in which that proviso is printed, that it is exactly the same as a provision of the present Constitution; and according to the ruling of the Chair, the Convention cannot now proceed to consider any matters of that kind. I will say in regard to the observation of the gentleman from Salem, and in order that the impression may be removed which is raised upon the minds of other gentlemen upon this floor, that the first idea of the Committee was to make a systematic and harmonious frame of government, so that they had in some cases to take liberties with the language which was passed by this Convention. For instance, in the very chapter now under consideration, the Convention decided by a vote that the Senate might adjourn three days at a time, but they passed no such vote in regard to the House. The existing Constitution provides that the House may adjourn for two days at a time. The Committee did take so much liberty as this; it being desirable to comprise it all into one chapter, under the head of the general court, for the purpose of harmony, they say that each branch of the legislature may adjourn for three days. They supposed it might be proper to apply that provision to the House of Representatives, being guided by the resolve which was passed by this Convention in relation to the Senate. If the gentleman from Salem was in his seat, I would say to him, that if he would turn to the chapter on elections, he will see a provision for the election of governor by the House and Senate in case there is no election by the people. The words "then eligible" were proposed to be added by one of the Committee, and I assented to it because I thought it expedient; it was thought proper that a man who should cease to reside in the Commonwealth should cease to be eligible as governor, and I accepted the recommendation. There was no provision made with regard to elections from cities; while provision with regard to the election of governor from the towns was made, the cities were omitted; and what did the Committee do? They had to make a provision which stands in the chapter relating to elections, that the manner of calling and holding public meetings in cities for the election of officers under the Constitution, and the manner of returning the votes given, shall be as now prescribed, or as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislature. What I desire is, that the Convention will take up these different changes and examine them. The Committee have no desire to make issue on these points; they are perfectly willing that the opinion of the Convention should be taken, and they believe that a good reason can be given for all they have done.

Mr. LIVERMORE, of Cambridge. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee, by what authority they put in the last sentence of article two, which is in these words:—

But nothing herein contained shall prevent the General Court from assembling at such other times as they shall judge necessary, or when called together by the Governor.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not find any resolve on that subject, among my official papers.

Mr. LIVERMORE. The Committee on the Frame of Government reported it in the following words:—

The Legislature shall assemble every year, on the first Wednesday in January; and shall be dissolved on the day next preceding the said first Wednesday in January, without any proclamation or other act of the Governor.

That was afterwards amended, by striking out the words "said first Wednesday in January," and inserting the words "first Wednesday in January following;" but there was no provision allowing them to assemble at such other times as they shall judge necessary.

Monday,] REVISED CONSTITUTION.—UPTON—LORD—OLIVER—BOUTWELL—DANA—LIVERMORE—ALLEN. [August 1st.

Mr. UPTON, of Boston. It seems to me that numbers seven and eight of the proposed amendments ought to go into the Frame of Government, and I can hardly understand why they were omitted, when all the other duties of the general court are included. I move that they be inserted, to constitute article twelve of the Frame of Government, as follows:—

ART. 12. The Legislature shall not create corporations by special act, when the object of the incorporation is attainable by general laws.

The Legislature shall have no power to pass any act granting any special charter for banking purposes, or any special act to increase the capital stock of any chartered bank; but corporations may be formed for such purposes, or the capital stock of chartered banks may be increased, under general laws.

The Legislature shall provide by law for the registry of all notes or bills authorized by general laws to be issued or put in circulation as money; and shall require ample security for the redemption of such notes in specie.

The question being taken, the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LORD, of Salem. I wish to inquire whether the word "present" is under the power of the Committee? I raise that question of order.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Salem raises the question of order, whether the amendments reported by the Committee of Revision to the fourth article of the first chapter, be in order. It is the opinion of the Chair that the insertion of the word "present" does not change the substance of the article; the experience of the Chair has been invariably that a question has been considered settled on receiving the assent of two-thirds of the members present and voting thereon. The Chair does not, therefore, regard it as changing the substance of the article.

Mr. LORD. In my opinion, it does change it, and I do not think the Committee on Revision have any authority to give a construction to an article about which there may have been a difference of opinion, so as to have the Constitution settled according to their exposition in relation to the governor's veto. The Constitution provides that sixteen shall be a quorum of the Senate; and I do not believe that that same Constitution meant that eleven members of the Senate should pass a bill over the governor's veto. I think, if they had meant that eleven members could pass a bill in such circumstances, they would not have said that it should take two-thirds of the body to pass it.

Now, if it should so happen—a thing which I can hardly suppose—that the President was wrong in his construction of the Constitution before, then this Constitution gets changed against my wishes, and without any action of this Convention. I am willing that the law should require two-thirds of one House only to pass a bill over the governor's veto, but I think there should be a check of two-thirds of either one body or the other of the legislature. It seems to me to be a good and desirable provision, and one which ought not to be changed, and especially it should not be changed without some action of the Convention. But suppose—and I agree that the charter of the Boston Wharf Company was so passed by a vote of 24 to 7—but suppose, upon a quo warranto against the corporation, the supreme court should hold that the charter never had an existence, if they should go behind that which appeared to be a legal enactment, and make that decision, the fact that the President of this Convention had a different view of the subject, would not seem to me to be a sufficient reason for sustaining this phraseology. If, Sir, it really does mean the same thing, then it seems to me to be right to put it into the Constitution; if it does not, then it ought not to be incorporated into that instrument. It is undertaking to give a construction to, and to reduce to a certainty, a provision of the Constitution, upon which, perhaps, gentlemen may entertain different opinions. I am myself so much opposed to allowing two-thirds of a bare majority to pass a bill over the veto of the governor, that if that had been the true construction heretofore, I should have been in favor of a change. And I now move that the word "present," where it appears in italics, be struck out.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. LORD, and there were, on a division—ayes, 63; noes, 162.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OLIVER, of Lawrence. Since the amended Constitution, as presented by the Committee, contains some provisions for which, when it comes before the people, I can vote, and some for which I cannot vote, and as these to which I refer are all contained in division number one of their Report, thereby compelling me to vote either against some that I approve of, or for some that I disapprove of, I move, in order to relieve myself from this future false position, that article three of this chapter, which is as follows:—

ART. 3. The compensation of members of the General Court shall be established by standing laws; but no act increasing the compensation shall apply to the General Court which passes such act; and no compensation shall be allowed for attendance of members at any one session for a longer time than one hundred days.

Be separated from this chapter, and be placed among those provisions which are proposed to be submitted to the people as independent propositions, and form a new one numbered "nine."

The question was taken upon Mr. Oliver's motion, and it was decided in the negative.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OLIVER. I make the same motion in regard to article thirteenth of the same chapter, and for the same reasons. That article reads as follows:—

ART. 13. In all elections by the General Court, or either branch thereof, a majority of votes shall be required, and the members shall vote viva voce.

The question was taken on the latter motion, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL, of Berlin. Some question has arisen in regard to the second article, relating to the general court. It reads as follows:—

ART. 2. The political year shall begin on the first Wednesday in January; and the General Court shall assemble every year on the said first Wednesday in January, and shall be dissolved on the day next preceding the first Wednesday in January following, without any proclamation or other act of the Governor. But nothing herein contained shall prevent the General Court from assembling at such other times as they shall judge necessary, or when called together by the Governor.

The question is upon the last clause. The Committee on the Bill of Rights, so far as I can learn, made an amendment to the first article of the existing chapter on the general court, which was adopted by the Convention. But it happens that in the tenth article of the Amendments to the present Constitution, are the words, "but nothing herein contained shall prevent the general court from assembling at such other times as they shall judge necessary, or when called together by the governor."

So far as I know, the Convention have never passed upon that portion of the tenth article or amendment to the present Constitution. The Committee have transferred that article, and made it here the closing paragraph of the second article upon the general court. So that, while I believe that the Convention have passed upon something nearly like this article, yet they have not passed upon that; if I am correct, the provision being part of the existing Constitution of the Commonwealth.

Mr. DANA, for Manchester. I can only say, that the preparation of this chapter was placed in my hands. I found this last clause in the old Constitution, and could not find any resolve by which it was repealed, and therefore I felt bound to put it into the Constitution, and it was adopted by the Committee.

Mr. LIVERMORE, of Cambridge. I move to strike out the very words contained in this last clause, that is, the clause relating to the assembling of the general court at such other times as they shall deem necessary. To be sure, it occurs in another part of the Constitution, but the Committee reported to strike out of the present Constitution the first article, and that was adopted by the Convention. I do not know what effect that clause would have, standing in another part of the Constitution. It was once struck out by the vote of the Convention. If in order, I now move to strike out those words.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the motion is not in order, as it proposes a change in matter of substance. If it appears from the records that the Convention have stricken out from the Constitution those words, the Chair will rule upon it as a question of order.

Mr. LIVERMORE. I desire to reserve the right to examine the matter.

Mr. ALLEN, of Worcester. I think I can explain the matter. In a part of the Constitution committed to the Committee on the Frame of Government, there was a provision that the legislature should assemble on the first Wednesday of January, and when called by the governor, and also at such other times as they should judge necessary. The Committee on the Frame of Government, moved to strike out that part which authorized the legislature to assemble at its pleasure. The Convention adopted that amendment. But it seems that a similar provision, which authorized the general court to assemble at its pleasure, occurs in another part of the Constitution. The Committee on the Frame of Government had not that part of the Constitution submitted to them, and therefore, they could not make a Report concerning it. The consequence

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—BUTLER—MORTON—LORD—DANA—HALE—GARDNER.

[August 1st.

is, that while the Convention have signified the purpose to take away from the legislature the power of assembling at such times as they should deem necessary, there is still a provision left in the Constitution, authorizing them to do so, and that remains in the new Constitution.

If the Convention generally believe that it is not necessary for the legislature to assemble, and to hold extra sessions, except when called together by the governor—and, I believe, extra sessions never have been held except upon such call—perhaps by general consent, and without objection, this part of the Constitution might be made to conform to the vote which the Convention have already adopted, and these words be stricken out.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. I wish merely to suggest, that the right of the general court to assemble without the consent of the governor, is a valuable right. It is one which made the fundamental quarrel between Governor Gage and the general court of that day. He refused to have them called together, and made proclamation that they should not assemble together, but when they thought that the exigencies of the times required it, they did so; and, when they came to make a Constitution, they took care not to put themselves into the power of any governor. Therefore, I object to having it struck out.

Mr. MORTON, of Taunton. Is there no way of getting at this matter without unanimous consent? I did not exactly hear the suggestions of the gentleman from Worcester. I think it very important to strike out the words "at such other times as they shall judge necessary or" and leave them to be called together by the governor. Before it is finally settled one way or another, I beg leave to make a suggestion or two. It seems to me that if we authorize the general court to meet as often as they please, we render entirely nugatory another provision which we have incorporated among the new provisions of the Constitution, and we had better strike that out, if we retain this. We have provided, in another clause, that no session of the general court shall last beyond one hundred days; but such a restriction is entirely useless, if they may have half a dozen sessions in the year. The motion which I made upon the subject, and which finally passed, only limited the sessions to one hundred days; but if the legislature have the right to adjourn over a week, and then hold another session, it seems to me that the first provision is entirely useless. I make this suggestion for the consideration of the gentlemen of the Convention as worthy of attention.

Mr. LORD, of Salem. I desire to call the mind of the President to a matter of construction. I take it that the old instrument is to be construed as entire. In the old Constitution, chapter first, under the Frame of Government, section first, provides, that the legislative body shall assemble every year, on the first Wednesday of May, and at such other time as they shall judge necessary. In the tenth article of the Amendments to the Constitution, the first Wednesday of May was changed to the first Wednesday of January; and the phrase "But nothing herein contained shall prevent the general court from assembling at such other times as they shall judge necessary, or when called together by the governor," was merely put into that article, to show that the entire first section was not to be abrogated; that they meant simply, to change the time of meeting. It was introduced for that purpose, and to show that the framers of it did not mean to change the power of the general court to sit when they should deem it necessary. But this Convention, having changed that first article, it seems to me that the proviso that it shall not be altered, falls also, and that the change is perfect and complete. I make these suggestions as worthy of consideration, and not because I want to have those words stricken out, for I agree, somewhat, with the opinions of the gentleman from Lowell, that, after all, this legislature, which we treat so contumeliously, is a pretty important branch of this government, and ought to have some power, and that they should come together whenever the exigencies of the public require it. But certain, it does, as suggested by the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) render nugatory the provision limiting the session to one hundred days; because they may have a session the next day after the hundred days have expired, and take another hundred days, and get their pay for it. I merely call the attention of the presiding officer to this matter of construction, to know—when we consider the form of the matter which was original in the Constitution, and that the tenth amendment only changed the day, and provided that this other matter of the first article, should not be repealed by that—whether, when we come to repeal the first article, the other does not fall with it?

Mr. DANA, for Manchester. A single word upon this matter. As I recollect it, there was no debate or consideration of that point, when the Report was made from the Committee, of which the gentleman from Worcester, (Mr. Allen,) was chairman. There was no debate upon the point whether we should prevent the legislature from meeting without the consent of the governor. I found no amendment debated, striking out the grant of power, and I supposed the Convention had not intended to strike it out, and the Revising Committee did not feel authorized to do so.

In the next place, I should feel reluctant to say that the legislature never shall meet but by the consent of the governor. Suppose that, after the January session, in the autumn, or in the early part of the winter, there should be war, insurrection, or invasion, and the governor was not to be relied upon, should the people of the Commonwealth be put into such a situation that they cannot meet in legislature, to provide the necessary measures of defence and safety?

I have no idea that the legislature will be likely to meet unnecessarily, but would we like to say that they never should meet in extra session unless by the call of the governor?

As to pay, they may have extra pay now, if the governor calls them together, and they ought to be paid if they come together upon an exigency of the public affairs, without the consent of the governor.

Mr. HALE, of Bridgewater. I would inquire of the gentleman for Manchester, in what way the general court should hold a session in such case, unless by a call of the governor, or by having adjourned to meet again on a given day? We ought certainly to provide some mode by which they can be called together in case of great emergency.

Mr. DANA, for Manchester. I can say to the gentleman from Bridgewater, that if any exigency should arise, rendering it necessary for the legislature to meet, and the Constitution says that they may meet, they will find out a way to meet. The independence and self-subsistence of the legislative power, and representative department, is an essential idea in the Anglo Saxon race. If the Constitution says they may meet, and the exigency says they must meet, I think they will meet.

Mr. GARDNER, of Seekonk. I hope this section will stand as it is. In 1746, a message was sent to the then governor of the Commonwealth, (Governor Shirley,) to call the legislature together, to settle a boundary question between this State and the State of Rhode Island. Notwithstanding that this was felt to be a question of great importance, the governor did not feel obliged to call an extra session, and the commissioners of Rhode Island ran an ex parte boundary line, from which all the difficulties that have ever arisen between the two States, has originated. I think that that is one essential reason why this provision should be retained. As the gentleman for Manchester says, the legislature will find a way to meet, if it be necessary that they should.

The first chapter on the "Frame of Government," as amended, was then finally passed.

The second chapter was then read by the Secretary, containing provisions in regard to the Senate districts in which senators are to be chosen; qualifications of candidates; manner of electing senators; examination of election returns; quorum of the Senate; impeachments, &c., and it was finally passed without farther amendment. It is as follows:—

[ARTICLE 1. There shall be annually elected by the inhabitants of this Commonwealth, qualified as in this Constitution is provided, forty persons to be senators, for the year ensuing their election; and the Senate shall be the first branch of the General Court. For this purpose, the General Court, holden next after the adoption of this Constitution, and next after each decennial census thereafter, shall divide the Commonwealth into forty districts, composed of contiguous territory, and as nearly equal in population as may be: provided, that no town or ward of a city be divided thereof. Each district shall be entitled to elect one senator, who shall have been an inhabitant of this Commonwealth for five years immediately preceding his election, and at the time of his election shall be an inhabitant of the district for which he is chosen.]

ART. 2. There shall be a meeting on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, annually, forever, of the inhabitants of each town and city in this Commonwealth, to be called and warned in due course of law, at least seven days before the day of such meeting, for the purpose of electing senators; and at such meetings every qualified voter shall have a right to give in his vote for a senator for the district of which he is an inhabitant.

The selectmen of the several towns shall preside at the town meetings impartially; and shall receive the votes of all the inhabitants of such towns present and qualified to vote for a senator, and shall sort and count them in open town meeting, and in presence of the town clerk, who shall make a fair record, in presence of the selectmen, and, in open town meeting, of the name of every person voted for, and of the number of votes against his name; and a fair copy of this record shall be attested by the selectmen and the town clerk, and shall be sealed up, directed to the Secretary of the Commonwealth for the time being, with a superscription expressing the purport of the contents thereof, and delivered by the town clerk of said towns to the sheriff of the county in which such town lies, thirty days at least before the first Wednesday in January annually; or it shall be delivered into the Secretary's office seventeen days at least before the said first Wednesday in January; and the sheriff of each county shall deliver all such certificates, by him received, into the Secretary's office, seventeen days before the said first Wednesday in January.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—EARLE—OLIVER.

[August 1st.

And the inhabitants of plantations unincorporated, qualified as this Constitution provides, shall have the same privilege of voting for a senator, in the plantations where they reside, as town inhabitants have in their respective towns; and the plantation meetings for that purpose shall be held annually on the same Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, at such place in the plantations respectively as the assessors thereof shall direct; which assessors shall have like authority for notifying the voters, collecting and returning the votes, as the selectmen and town clerks have in their several towns, by this Constitution. And all other persons living in places unincorporated, (qualified as aforesaid,) shall have the privilege of giving in their votes for a senator, in the town where the inhabitants of such unincorporated places shall be assessed, and be notified of the place of meeting by the selectmen of the said town for that purpose, accordingly.

[ART. 3. The Governor and Council shall, as soon as may be, examine the returned copies of the record provided for in article second of this chapter, and ascertain who shall have received the largest number of votes in each of the several senatorial districts, and the person who has so received the largest number of votes in each of said districts shall be a senator for the following political year; and the governor shall cause each of said persons, so appearing to be elected, to be notified at least fourteen days before the first Wednesday in January of each year, to attend on that day, and take his seat accordingly.]

ART. 4. Not less than twenty-one members shall constitute a quorum for doing business; but a less number may organize, adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members.]

ART. 5. The Senate shall be a court with full authority to hear and determine all impeachments made by the House of Representatives against any officer or officers of the Commonwealth, for misconduct and maladministration in their offices; but, previous to the trial of every impeachment, the members of the Senate shall respectively be sworn, truly and impartially to try and determine the charge in question, according to evidence. Their judgment, however, shall not extend farther than to removal from office and disqualification to hold or enjoy any place of honor, trust, or profit, under this Commonwealth: but the party, so convicted, shall be, nevertheless, liable to indictment, trial, judgment and punishment, according to the laws of the land.

The Secretary was then directed to read the third chapter, containing provisions in relation to the House of Representatives—the mode of their election, and the qualifications of voters; mode of apportioning representatives among the several towns and cities by the Senate; division of cities into districts; time of electing representatives; fines on towns neglecting to elect; qualifications of representatives; power of the House in regard to impeachments; the origination of money bills; and the number of members constituting a quorum. It was read, as follows:—

ARTICLE 1. There shall be, in the Legislature of this Commonwealth, a representation of the people, annually elected, and founded upon the principle of equality.

ART. 2. And in order to provide for a representation of the citizens of this Commonwealth, founded upon the principle of equality, every corporate town, containing less than one thousand inhabitants, may elect one representative in the year when the valuation of estates shall be settled, and, in addition thereto, one representative five years in every ten years. Every town containing one thousand inhabitants and less than four thousand, may elect one representative. Every town containing four thousand inhabitants and less than eight thousand, may elect two representatives. Every town containing eight thousand inhabitants and less than twelve thousand, may elect three representatives. Every city or town containing twelve thousand inhabitants, may elect four representatives. Every city or town containing over twelve thousand inhabitants, may elect one additional representative for every four thousand inhabitants it shall contain, over twelve thousand. Any two towns, each containing less than one thousand inhabitants, may, by consent of a majority of the legal voters present at a legal meeting in each of said towns respectively, called for that purpose, form themselves into a representative district, to continue for the term of not less than two years; and such district shall have all the rights, in regard to representation, which belong to a town having one thousand inhabitants. And this apportionment shall be based upon the census of the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty, until a new census shall be taken.

ART. 3. The Senate at its first session after this Constitution shall have been adopted, and at its first session after the next State census shall have been taken, and at its first session next after each decennial State census thereafter, shall apportion the number of representatives to which each town and city shall be entitled, and shall cause the same to be seasonably published; and in all apportionments after the first, the numbers which shall entitle any town or city, to two, three, four, or more representatives, shall be increased or diminished in the same proportion as the population of the whole Commonwealth shall have increased or decreased since the last preceding apportionment.

ART. 4. No town hereafter incorporated, containing less than fifteen hundred inhabitants, shall be entitled to choose a representative.

ART. 5. Each city in this Commonwealth, shall be divided, by such means as the Legislature may provide, into districts of contiguous territory, as nearly equal in population as may be, for the election of representatives, which districts shall not be changed oftener than once in five years: provided, however, that no one district shall be entitled to elect more than three representatives.]

ART. 6. The members of the House of Representatives shall be chosen on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, annually; but meetings may be adjourned, if necessary, for the choice of representatives, to the next day, and again to the next succeeding day, but no farther: but in case a second meeting shall be necessary for the choice of representatives, such meetings shall be held on the fourth Monday of the same month of November.

ART. 7. The House of Representatives shall have power, from time to time, to impose fines upon such towns as shall neglect to choose and return members to the same, agreeably to this Constitution.

ART. 8. Every member of the House of Representatives shall have been for one year, at least, next preceding his election, an inhabitant of the town he shall be chosen to represent.

ART. 9. The House of Representatives shall be the grand inquest of this Commonwealth; and all impeachments made by them shall be heard and tried by the Senate.

ART. 10. All money bills shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills.

ART. 11. Not less than one hundred members of the House of Representatives shall constitute a quorum for doing business.

Mr. EARLE, of Worcester. I move to amend this chapter, in the second article, by striking out these words:—

Every town containing eight thousand inhabitants, and less than twelve thousand, may elect three representatives. Every city or town containing twelve thousand inhabitants may elect four representatives.

Also to strike out the word "twelve" in the next line below, and insert in its place the word "four." The part which I propose to strike out is mere surplusage. The amendment will not change the meaning of the article, while it will divest it of unnecessary verbiage. The article, as it now stands, reads thus:—

ART. 2. And in order to provide for a representation of the citizens of this Commonwealth, founded upon the principle of equality, every corporate town, containing less than one thousand inhabitants, may elect one representative in the year when the valuation of estates shall be settled, and, in addition thereto, one representative five years in every ten years. Every town containing one thousand inhabitants and less than four thousand, may elect one representative. Every town containing four thousand inhabitants and less than eight thousand, may elect two representatives. Every town containing eight thousand inhabitants and less than twelve thousand, may elect three representatives. Every city or town containing twelve thousand inhabitants, may elect four representatives. Every city or town containing over twelve thousand inhabitants, may elect one additional representative for every four thousand inhabitants it shall contain over twelve thousand. Any two towns, each containing less than one thousand inhabitants, may, by consent of a majority of the legal voters present at a legal meeting, in each of said towns respectively, called for that purpose, form themselves into a representative district, to continue for the term of not less than two years; and such district shall have all the rights, in regard to representation, which belong to a town having one thousand inhabitants. And this apportionment shall be based upon the census of the year eighteen hundred and fifty, until a new census shall be taken.

If it be amended as I propose, it will then read as follows:—

ART. 2. And in order to provide for a representation of the citizens of this Commonwealth, founded upon the principle of equality, every corporate town containing less than one thousand inhabitants, may elect one representative in the year when the valuation of estates shall be settled, and, in addition thereto, one representative five years in every ten years. Every town containing one thousand inhabitants and less than four thousand, may elect one representative. Every town containing four thousand inhabitants and less than eight thousand, may elect two representatives. Every city or town containing over four thousand inhabitants, may elect one additional representative for every four thousand inhabitants it shall contain over four thousand. Any two towns, each containing less than one thousand inhabitants, may, by consent of a majority of the legal voters present at a legal meeting, in each of said towns respectively, called for that purpose, form themselves into a representative district, to continue for the term of not less than two years; and such district shall have all the rights, in regard to representation, which belong to a town having one thousand inhabitants. And this apportionment shall be based upon the census of the year eighteen hundred and fifty, until a new census shall be taken.

Mr. OLIVER, of Lawrence. I would ask whether the article, if thus amended, will be consistent?

Mr. EARLE. The amendment will not change the meaning of the article at all. It will rather make it more consistent, if anything.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION. — BUTLER — EARLE — SCHOULER — MORTON — BOUTWELL.

[August 1st.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. I think that this is an amendment of substance rather than of form, and therefore, I must object to it.

Mr. EARLE. I repeat, that it does not change the subject at all. When I proposed this amendment, at the time the article was under consideration by the Convention, it was objected, that the Committee on Revision would take out all surplusage, and this not having been done here by the Committee, I propose to strike it out now.

Mr. BUTLER. My reason for thinking this a substantive amendment, is this: You go on providing for the representation of towns progressively, till you get up to towns having a sufficient number of inhabitants to entitle them to be chartered as cities. Yet the gentleman from Worcester proposes to strike out these words: "Every city or town containing twelve hundred inhabitants, may elect four representatives." I really do not see any necessity at all for this amendment.

Mr. EARLE. I would like to read the article again, so that the Convention may see how the matter will stand. [Mr. Earle accordingly read the article as he proposed to amend it, as given above.] That is precisely the provision now; and if we allow these words to stand, we might as well go on repeating the same words, until we get up to fifty representatives. It is mere surplusage. If the Convention choose to have it, they can say so; and if not, they will strike them out.

Mr. SCHOULER, of Boston. I am not quite certain about the amendment of the gentleman from Worcester being surplusage; but I feel pretty sure, that there is some surplusage in the first part of the article. In the first place, it says: "In order to provide for a representation of the citizens of this Commonwealth upon a principle of equality, every corporate town," &c. And I find also in the first article these words: "There shall be, in the Legislature of this Commonwealth, a representation of the people, annually elected, and founded upon the principle of equality." Now, all this rhodomontade about being "founded upon the principle of equality," I hold to be not mere surplusage, but something a great deal worse, [laughter]; and if we are to amend on the principle of striking out all the "surplusage," it strikes me there will be very little of your new Constitution left. [Renewed laughter.]

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. MORTON, of Taunton. I would ask the attention of the Convention to the eighth article as it is prepared by the Committee. It is as follows:—

ART. 8. Every member of the House of Representatives shall have been for one year, at least, next preceding his election, an inhabitant of the town he shall be chosen to represent.

It seems to me that the Committee have omitted a very important provision of the old Constitution. I will, therefore, read it. It will be found on the eightieth page of the Constitution now in the hands of members, and is as follows:—

III. Every member of the House of Representatives shall be chosen by written votes; and, for one year at least next preceding his election, shall have been an inhabitant of, [and have been seized in his own right of a freehold of the value of one hundred pounds, within the town he shall be chosen to represent, or any rateable estate to the value of two hundred pounds;] and he shall cease to represent the said town immediately on his ceasing to be qualified as aforesaid.

This latter clause, "and he shall cease to represent the said town immediately on his ceasing to be qualified as aforesaid," which I hold to be exceedingly important, is here entirely omitted. I think it should be supplied. I therefore move to amend the eighth article of this chapter by adding this clause to it, so as to make it read:—

ART. 8. Every member of the House of Representatives shall have been for one year, at least, next preceding his election, an inhabitant of the town he shall be chosen to represent; and he shall cease to represent the said town immediately on his ceasing to be qualified as aforesaid.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. If gentlemen will look at the Constitution as it at present stands, they will perceive that there are certain words in the article referred to by the gentleman from Taunton, enclosed within brackets, involving a property qualification for members, which words were stricken out by the Convention of 1820, leaving the article in a somewhat inelegant, if not unintelligible, condition. We have, of course, no authority to say, that no other words than those within the brackets were stricken out at that time. The qualification there alluded to, I take it, referred entirely to property; and there can be no doubt, that the design of the Convention of 1820 was to do away with that qualification only, because the qualification of having been a resident in a town one year preceding election, is a qualification that, by the terms of the present Constitution, cannot cease after it is obtained; but the property qualification may cease.

Mr. MORTON. It seems to me there need be no difficulty in understanding the provision of the present Constitution in regard to this, as it now stands. I am aware, that originally, two qualifications for a representative were required: A qualification of property, and also a qualification in regard to residence; but the amendment of 1820 struck out the qualification of property, leaving that of residence. I admit that the manner in which this provision was left, was very inelegantly expressed. But, if gentlemen will read the provision as we now receive it, I maintain, that it is capable of only one single construction. It may not, perhaps, be expressed in the best possible way, but it certainly does provide for a residence of one year in a town or city prior to election. That is an indispensable qualification, and the true meaning of it I hold to be, that it shall continue during the period of service: that when a representative changes his residence into another town, or county, or State, he ceases, by that act, to represent the town for which he was elected. Believing, therefore, that this is a valuable provision, I hope that we shall retain it in the revised Constitution.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. I do not understand how the amendment of the gentleman from Taunton will reach what he wants to reach, and I should object to it, somewhat, if we could get at it. The regulation now is, that every member of the House of Representatives shall have been for one year at least, next preceding his election, an inhabitant of the town he shall be chosen to represent. He shall have lived there a year before he is elected. Now, if he has lived there a year before he is elected, there is his full qualification; and after this is done, I do not see how a man can help having lived there. He may move away the next day, but yet, he has lived there a year.

Mr. MORTON. He ceases to represent the town immediately on his ceasing to be qualified, according to the present Constitution.

Mr. BUTLER. That is one of the reasons why the Constitution needs revising; it is one of the best arguments I could have, and I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to it. When the Constitution was originally made, there were two qualifications; one was, that he should have lived there a year, so as to have learned the wishes of the inhabitants; and the other was, that he should have so much money. When the amendment was made, taking out the money qualification; and Judge Cushing came to print his edition and put in the brackets—for which he has got a patent—having done that, what happened? That last line which used to refer to the money qualification, and which provided that when he ceased to be a freeholder, he ceased to represent the town—when he ceased to have property, he ceased to be qualified as aforesaid—stands now to refer to something that is wholly incongruous with it. I submit to my learned friend from Taunton, whether it is not just like a seizin, in a deed, it is either broken at once, or it is never broken. Now, we propose to say, that although it was never broken, still it may be broken afterwards. I appeal to him as a lawyer, if I am not correct in that position. I insist that this being qualified and "ceasing to be qualified as aforesaid," refers simply to the freehold qualification, and not to any other part of the Constitution. When the property qualification was stricken out, it did not make good grammar or good sense to leave it there; it made it say that a man should cease to live not before he was elected, but after he was elected; and that is one of the reasons first, against Mr. Cushing's copyright, and second, for the revision of the Constitution. I think this is a valuable privilege in a town. If a town chooses to elect a man who has lived there and has learned its habits, its manners, and the wants and wishes of the people, and he has had the qualification of living there a year before he is elected, and comes down here to represent them; but yet, he chooses to move away into another town,—now I take it that he is still elected from that town that sent him here. If they have chosen a man to represent them, they want to have him here, and what right have we to take away their privilege? He knows what their wants and wishes are, for he has lived there long enough to be qualified; and if qualified, he cannot be unqualified by simply crossing an imaginary line. For one, I am not willing that such an amendment should go in; for it is still an open question.

Mr. MORTON. I would not say another word, had it not been that I was appealed to as a lawyer, which is somewhat of a misnomer, on the part of the gentleman from Lowell. I know that I have grown somewhat rusty upon that subject, but still, I have kept in mind a few old rules of construction, which I think are now sound and bright, and as good as new; and in answer to the gentleman, I will refer to them. In the first place, it is one of the most ancient and well established rules of construction, that in construing a statute, or any other public instrument, you must so construe it as to give effect to all the language used in it; and if it is not exactly consistent, if some of it appears to have one definite meaning, yet, if taking it all together, you can give a construction to it to meet what is well settled, you are bound to give such a construction. Now, if you take it all together with a little latitude in construing the first part of it, you give a meaning to the whole of it. It provides that he shall have been an inhabitant for one year next preceding his election, and shall cease to represent the said town immediately on his ceasing to be qualified as aforesaid. If you take a little liberal construction, this last clause will be applicable to the residence; residence is what they are aiming at, as this is necessary in order to give entire effect to the last clause. The qualification refers to residence, and there is nothing else that it could refer to; and therefore, when he ceases to be a resident of that town, he ceases to be qualified. I suppose there was some wisdom, and some good sense, and some knowledge of English, in the Convention which preceded us thirty-three years ago; and it seems to me that we are not at liberty to assume that they did not know what they were saying, and that the language they used was a perfect nullity, with no meaning whatever. I suppose that respectable and learned body had an idea that they were adopting such language as would convey their meaning; and I am not willing to adopt a construction, the effect of which, would be to stultify that Convention of great men. Now, I differ with the gentleman from Lowell in regard to the reasonableness of it. I hold that a man, in order to be a representative of a town, should live in that town, in order not only that he may know what are the views and intentions, and wishes of the inhabitants, but in order that his interest may be identified with their interests. If a man is chosen, who the next day moves away into South Carolina, or New Orleans, or perhaps to some part of Europe, according to this construction of the Constitution, he can even come across the Atlantic in a steamer and take his place here in the House of Representatives, when he has no more interest in the welfare of the town which he formerly lived in, than the Queen of England has. In that point of view, I think the construction which I have given is the sound one, and I hope it will be retained.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—MORTON—BOUTWELL—SCHOULER—LORD—WILKINSON.

[August 1st.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. I beg leave to make a suggestion to the Convention upon another point. Some gentlemen have desired that we should propose specific amendments to the Constitution. I dare say, such a motion will be made before we adjourn to-night; but already several questions have arisen upon this floor as to what the Constitution is, because it is so difficult to analyze the existing provisions so as to determine just how far new amendments go in nullifying them. One word upon this particular point now under discussion. In 1780, the Convention provided that all persons should have two qualifications to entitle them to hold seats in the House of Representatives; one was, that they should have lived in the town they were chosen to represent, one year preceding their election; and the other was, that they should have a certain amount of property. In consequence of that, they said that a person not thus qualified should cease to represent the town from which he was chosen. I will give to the Convention of 1780 some credit for intelligence, although it so happens that the amendment alluded to, did not pass, by the by, until 1840; but they did not intend that a person should cease to be qualified, from any circumstance over which he had power of his own will, but on account of contingencies to which he was, or might be liable. There were two qualifications; he could rid himself of the one, but he could not rid himself of the other. If he had lived in the town for twelve months previous to his election, that qualification stood by him. But, if he possessed a hundred pounds, and should lose it in speculations, and become bankrupt, he then ceased to be qualified to represent the town. Therefore, the Committee did not follow the interpretation given by the gentleman who has had charge of this for twenty years. They came to the conclusion that when the people annulled the property qualification, they also annulled the result of it.

Mr. SCHOULER, of Boston. A case came up during the last session of the legislature, when a man was elected in the town of Blackstone, but previous to the adjournment of the House he had removed to the town of New Market, N. H. In consequence of this fact, the subject was referred to a committee, and the committee reported that the seat was vacant; but as it was only a day or two before the adjournment of the legislature, no action was taken upon it, and the report was laid upon the table without any decision being made. It was the decision of the majority of the committee, that the seat was vacant, under the eighth article of the Constitution. Now, Sir, I should like to understand this matter. I agree with the gentleman for Berlin, and I thought so last winter, that the article was ambiguous, and I want to make sense of it. I should like to know whether, under this article, a person could continue to represent a town even after he had moved out of the State; for if so, I think it should be amended.* There is no propriety whatever in allowing a person to represent a town after he ceased to be an inhabitant of the State, although it might not be so bad if he merely removed from one part of the State to another part; but an inhabitant of another State certainly cannot represent the people of this State. We had up last year—and that is what brought the matter before us—one of the most important bills, that with regard to the liquor law; and there are many gentlemen here who will recollect it was defeated by a tie-vote, the gentleman from Blackstone voting upon one side. There was another bill passed here, assessing taxes to the amount of $300,000 upon the people of the Commonwealth; and now the question for this Convention to decide is, whether a man who has moved out of this Commonwealth and is an inhabitant of another State, has a right to come into our legislature and vote to tax our people. If the construction at present is, that a man shall continue to be a representative after he has removed his residence from the State, I think this article should be amended so that he shall cease to be a representative after he has left the county or town where he was chosen—and above all, when he leaves the State.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. Morton, it was not agreed to.

Mr. LORD, of Salem. I desire to know whether this is not a matter of right that this should go in, if anybody desires it? It is printed as a part of our present Constitution, and no action of the Convention has stricken it out. I desire to have it put in as we always have had it in, and inasmuch as there is no authority that I can see for leaving it out.

The PRESIDENT. It seems from the Report of the Committee, that their judgment was that these words are not a part of the Constitution. They have so reported. The Chair cannot say that they are such a part of the Constitution as will go into the present draft upon the claim of a single member; and therefore the question has been submitted to the judgment of the Convention.

Mr. LORD. I desire to ask the Committee what draft of the Constitution they look upon as authentic. I am not sure that the Convention did not reject this on the ground that it should go in as a matter of right and not as amendment. If those words are a part of our present Constitution, they belong there as a matter of right, because this Convention has not stricken them out.

Mr. WILKINSON, of Dedham. I understand that the Chair rules that these words are not in the Constitution?

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman misunderstands the Chair. The Chair understands that the Committee have reported that they are not a part of the Constitution.

Mr. WILKINSON. It seems to me that there ought to be some way for the Convention to settle the question.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has not ruled that they are not a part of the Constitution, for if that had been the ruling, the Chair would not have submitted the motion of the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton). The question has been submitted to the Convention, and the Convention have decided not to insert the words.

Mr. WILKINSON. It strikes me clearly that the words are in the present Constitution. I see that the article now reported by the Committee is entitled on the margin "qualification." I therefore supposed that a person in order to be elected must be an inhabitant; that is a qualification which he should possess at the time of the election. He must have been an inhabitant for the next twelve months preceding his election, and that necessarily implies that at the time of his election he shall be an inhabitant, for he cannot have been an inhabitant for the twelve months next preceding his election, unless at the time of his election he is an inhabitant. Well, then, inhabitancy is one of the qualifications necessary to constitute a representative, and when the Constitution provides that he should have all those qualifications, and that they should continue till the election, it seems to me clear that the limitation implies the qualification of inhabitancy. It seems to me that inhabitancy is a qualification, and that the qualification must continue. If, however, as seems to be the opinion of some gentlemen, it is best to alter the Constitution, then it may be proper to introduce such a resolution. At any rate, it is proper that we should have a perfect understanding of this matter. It ought to be settled one way or another, and therefore it seems proper, if the President rules this an amendment in substance, and therefore out of order, that the question should at sometime be raised.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair did not rule that. It stated the question to the Convention, and the Convention has voted upon it.

Mr. GARDNER, of Boston. Has the Chair decided the motion of the gentleman from Boston?

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—WILKINSON—DANA—GRAY—LORD.

[August 1st.

The PRESIDENT. It has been decided by the Convention.

Mr. WILKINSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion of the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) was rejected.

Mr. DANA, for Manchester. I think it possible that there is a little misapprehension in the minds of members of the Convention. By turning to page eightieth of the Rules and Orders of the Convention, you will find in the middle of article third, of section third, chapter first, a part put in brackets. It is assumed, in the debates, that the putting of that part in brackets is a legal act done by some authority, and that all not in brackets is not a part of the Constitution. That is not so. The people of Massachusetts have never adopted those brackets in any way.

The following is the third article:—

III. Every member of the House of Representatives shall be chosen by written votes; and, for one year at least next preceding his election, shall have been an inhabitant of, [and have been seized in his own right of, a freehold of the value of one hundred pounds, within the town he shall be chosen to represent, or any ratable estate to the value of two hundred pounds;] and he shall cease to represent the said town immediately on his ceasing to be qualified as aforesaid.

Here you see the bracket is put after the word "pounds" instead of after the word "aforesaid," as it should have been. You may ask how the brackets came there. The answer is this: In 1780, the whole of the third article stood, requiring two qualifications, that of previous residence, and a freehold of the value of one hundred pounds, and the provision that a member should cease to represent a town immediately on his ceasing to be qualified as aforesaid.

If, then, gentlemen will turn to the 114th page of the same book, at the bottom of that page they will find this amendment:—

No possession of a freehold, or of any other estate, should be required as a qualification for holding a seat in either branch of the General Court, or in the Executive Council.

Then the question is—and it is an open question, and one never ruled upon by the people of the Commonwealth—did the passage of that amendment strike out all of the latter part, or only a portion of the latter part of the third section? Judge Cushing saw fit to put the brackets after the word "pounds" in his edition of the Constitution which he got up for sale, as a private matter. Another edition might have put it after the word "aforesaid." The legislature has printed the Constitution after Judge Cushing's edition, but only for convenience, and not enacting constitutional law by brackets.

The words "and he shall cease to represent the said town immediately on his ceasing to be qualified as aforesaid," have no more virtue than the part in brackets. The fact that the words stand within or without the brackets, has no effect whatever. Then it is an open question as to what is the effect of the last clause on page 114 which I have read. The Committee were of opinion that it only affected the qualification of freehold, because the qualification that a man should have resided for one year, is a thing which either existed at the time or not, and if it did exist at the time, it never ceased to exist afterwards. Could a man ever cease to have been twenty-one years of age, after he had once been so at a given time?

Mr. GRAY, of Boston. I agree that the gentleman for Manchester has stated the question fairly, and that is, that gentlemen, whichever side they take, are not to rest their position upon these brackets. I am very sorry that this digest was ever made and adopted. If this were the proper occasion, I could point out very important blunders in this respect.

If we take the text of the Constitution of 1780, and as it existed until 1840, we find the third clause as it stands, as it has been read by the gentleman for Manchester, beginning with the words, "every member," and ending with the word "aforesaid." No person raised a construction upon that. But, in 1840, the people adopted an amendment, in which there was a clause, very clear and distinct, that no possession of freehold or other estate should be required as a qualification for either branch of the legislature, or the council. Now, I am ready, with the gentleman for Manchester, to reconcile those two clauses.

Every member of the House of Representatives shall be chosen by written votes. But what qualification must he have? What incident, accident and possession, must he have to qualify him for a seat? He must, for one year preceding his election, have been an inhabitant of the town, and "he shall cease to represent the said town immediately on his ceasing to be qualified as aforesaid." I contend that upon every fair principle of construction, that the clause, "he shall cease," &c., refers to the first part of the qualification, as well as to the last; refers to the residence, as making a part of the qualification. It is a question of construction. I say it is a question upon which I never entertained a doubt; and, until the decision of the Committee, I did not suppose that any other one did. I have heard that in this Committee, or in some other committee, the question was raised upon striking out this qualification. I do maintain that this is an essential part of the qualification, and the words, "he shall cease," &c., refers to one as well as to the other. The last part being qualified by the act of 1840, we need say nothing about that. The question is this, and it is an important one: Shall the Convention now do what they have not yet done, shall they abolish the qualification of residence? I think that has not been done, and if it is to be done, I object to it.

This is a question of so much consequence, that I venture to ask the yeas and nays upon the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays were ordered—one-fifth of the members present voting therefor.

Mr. LORD, of Salem. I desire to call the attention of those gentlemen who think that this does not relate to anything but the freehold, to this point, whether this proposition of the Constitution requires that the person to be elected shall be an inhabitant of the town at the time of his election? And if they hold that he must be an inhabitant of the town at the time of his election, where do they get that proposition, except from the phraseology that he must have been an inhabitant for twelve months next preceding? Then, if he must have been an inhabitant for twelve months next preceding, and if that phraseology, by its own force imputes a present inhabitancy, the same qualification which requires a twelve months' residence requires a present inhabitancy.

If gentlemen will remark the next article as it stood in the original Constitution, they will perceive that the same phraseology is used, and there nobody doubts that present inhabitancy is required. The fourth article in the original Constitution, was this:—

IV. [Every male person, being twenty-one years of age, and resident in any particular town in this Commonwealth, for the space of one year next preceding, having a freehold estate within the same town, of the annual income of three pounds, or any estate of the value of sixty pounds, shall have a right to vote in the choice of a representative or representatives for the said town.]

Now, Sir, does that require present inhabitancy?

The hour of two o'clock having arrived, the President adjourned the Convention until three o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at three o'clock, P. M., and resumed the consideration of the unfinished business of the morning session.

Mr. GRAY, of Boston. It will be recollected that I this morning moved the yeas and nays upon the question now before the Convention. I am unwilling, when not compelled to do so, to make a motion which merely takes up the time of the Convention, or even to appear to make such a motion. I find that the question of residence of members as a qualification, is disposed of, to a great degree, by another article, and though I still adhere to my argument, I do not think it important that the yeas and nays should be called, and perhaps other gentlemen who voted with me will think so also. I therefore move a reconsideration of the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered. I trust gentlemen will observe that this in no way affects my argument as applied to the main question.

Mr. LORD, of Salem. I should like to have the gentleman from Boston tell us what other provision he refers to, as disposing of this question, to some degree?

Mr. GRAY. I refer to article eighth of chapter third of the new Constitution. I had the impression when I made the motion, that that disposed of the whole question of qualification, but it does not, and my justification is, I had but little time to go over the pamphlet containing the Report of the Committee. Though I think it an important question, still, finding the matter standing in a different position from what I had supposed, I do not wish to have the time of the Convention taken up by calling the yeas and nays.

The question was then taken upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered, and it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. GRAY. I now withdraw my motion for the yeas and nays.

The question then recurred upon the motion offered by Mr. Wilkinson, to reconsider the vote by which the Convention rejected the motion of the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton).

Mr. GRAY. I beg leave to make a remark or two. It has been conceded, I believe, that if there is anything in the old Constitution which has not been struck out, it goes into the new Constitution; as a matter of course, and as a matter of right. Now, Sir, it appears to me to be a clear case, as it did to my friend from Salem, that these words have not been rightfully struck out by the Committee; that they have never been struck out by the Convention. I make these suggestions to bring the matter once more to the consideration of the Chair, and of the House. It is not a question whether we had better do one thing or the other, but whether they are not left in by the action of the Convention.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION. — CHAPIN — LORD — HILLARD.

[August 1st.

I wish merely to make myself fully understood. Article eighth of chapter third, of the Report of this Committee, provides that every member of the House of Representatives shall have been, for one year next at least, preceding his election, an inhabitant of the town he shall be chosen to represent. That, Sir, as I have stated, provides, in a great degree, for the question of residence; but there is another branch which is not provided for, though, as I contend, it is provided for in the old Constitution, and that is, that he shall cease to be a representative when he ceases to be a resident. Now, the Committee have struck out those words; and what I contend for, is, that the Convention never did strike them out, and every-body agrees they are in the old Constitution, and the Committee in doing it committed a mistake; and they should go in here as a matter of course.

Mr. CHAPIN, of Worcester. The question, I believe, is on the motion of the gentleman from Dedham.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) was rejected.

The question was then taken, and on a division, there were—ayes, 39; noes, 103.

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

Mr. LORD, of Salem. I move that all that portion of chapter third which relates to the House of Representatives, involving articles two, three, and four, be stricken out of this chapter, and submitted to the people as a separate amendment. The articles are as follows:—

ART. 2. And in order to provide for a representation of the citizens of this Commonwealth, founded upon the principle of equality, every corporate town, containing less than one thousand inhabitants, may elect one representative in the year when the valuation of estates shall be settled, and, in addition thereto, one representative five years in every ten years. Every town containing one thousand inhabitants and less than four thousand, may elect one representative. Every town containing four thousand inhabitants and less than eight thousand, may elect two representatives. Every town containing eight thousand inhabitants and less than twelve thousand, may elect three representatives. Every city or town containing twelve thousand inhabitants, may elect four representatives. Every city or town containing over twelve thousand inhabitants, may elect one additional representative for every four thousand inhabitants it shall contain, over twelve thousand. Any two towns, each containing less than one thousand inhabitants, may, by consent of a majority of the legal voters present at a legal meeting, in each of said towns respectively, called for that purpose, form themselves into a representative district, to continue for the term of not less than two years; and such district shall have all the rights, in regard to representation, which belong to a town having one thousand inhabitants. And this apportionment shall be based upon the census of the year eighteen hundred and fifty, until a new census shall be taken.

ART. 3. The Senate, at its first session after this Constitution shall have been adopted, and at its first session after the next State Census shall have been taken, and at its first session next after each decennial State Census thereafter, shall apportion the number of Representatives to which each town and city shall be entitled, and shall cause the same to be seasonably published; and in all apportionments after the first, the numbers which shall entitle any town or city, to two, three, four, or more Representatives, shall be increased or diminished in the same proportion as the population of the whole Commonwealth shall have increased or decreased since the last preceding apportionment.

ART. 4. No town hereafter incorporated, containing less than fifteen hundred inhabitants, shall be entitled to choose a representative.

Mr. LORD. I do not think that we shall do our duty to those who sent us here, and who certainly have a right to have a separate vote upon amendments so important as these, unless we provide that right. I think it is desired by the people that they should pass upon all very important changes, upon their merits separately. I do not believe that the people of this Commonwealth want to have things that they like, and things that they do not like, mixed together, and then to be told "you must take both, or get neither." I think the people of the Commonwealth are as capable of deciding on what they want, as this Convention is. When gentlemen profess to have so much respect for the people, I want them to understand that I think the people have quite as much discrimination as we have, and that they are quite as capable of judging of what they want, as we are to judge for them; and I have no hesitation in saying that they would prefer to pass upon this question of the basis of representation, without having it sweetened with something the Convention thinks they would like. The Convention in effect, says: "We want the people to take this basis of representation which we have prepared for them. We know that the natural sense of justice inherent in the people will never allow them to pass this system as it is; but we will sweeten it to make it palatable, and thus we will compel them to take this thing which they do not like, with something which they do like."

Sir, I desire to have somebody point out to me any difficulty that exists in the way of these three articles being put at the end of the eight propositions on which you propose to take the vote of the people separately, and to make them proposition number nine, for the same purpose, and say—as we propose to say in regard to the other eight propositions—"If these articles be adopted and ratified, then they shall be a part of the Constitution; and if they are not adopted and ratified, then the present basis shall stand as the basis of representation until it is changed by some competent authority?" I want to know the difficulty in the way of this? What is it? Where is it? Is it not as easy to submit separately a question of such vast moment and importance as this, as any one of the eight propositions on which you propose to take a separate vote? Quite as easy, Mr. President, and much more desirable; but the real fact is, that it is an unjust proposition, and gentlemen know it; and, knowing that, they sagaciously conclude that the people will not swallow it without some sweetening; that the people will reject it unless something is put along with it to make it palatable.

My idea is—and the people will eventually acknowledge that it is the true one, whatever may be done by this Convention—that no one proposition which may be popular, ought to be compelled to drag after it an unpopular one, nor should an unpopular proposition be permitted to hang, for its success, upon the skirts of a popular one. Nobody in this Convention believes that there is the slightest difficulty or obstruction in the way of putting this matter as a separate question to the people—except that party in the Convention who fear to trust the people, and who are determined to dragoon them into the adoption of this measure, if they can do so by any possible means. Talk not to me about "trusting the people," when you dare not say to them "Will you have this, or will you have that?" Sir, I was surprised at the argument of the gentleman for Berlin, in regard to this question, when he professed to entertain great fear that if the question of the basis of representation were put alternately, as between two systems, there would be danger of losing both! Sir, in adopting the amendment which I suggest, we do not propose to do anything except to say that, in case the system you have now incorporated into your Constitution should not meet the approbation of the popular will, the system as we now have it shall remain as it is. There is, therefore, none of the danger of which the gentleman speaks; and the only objection to taking this question separately that I can see, is, a fixed determination to cram this system down the throats of the people, at the risk of losing all the other amendments, or of remaining upon the old Constitution. I have heard no reason that is at all satisfactory to my mind—nor have I heard any that I think will satisfy the people—why particular articles should be taken from the Constitution and put by themselves, while others are not so. I regard this question of representation as one of the most vital questions that has come before us; and, in reference to it, I deem it so important for the people to know who are willing that they should pass upon it by itself—a proposition which, in my judgment, the people would reject with scorn, as an injustice that they would be unwilling to perpetrate—and also because, as a member of this Convention, I feel desirous that my constituents should have an opportunity of voting simply "yes" or "no" upon this matter, I ask, that when the question is taken upon my amendment, it may be taken by the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were accordingly ordered, on a division, the vote being—ayes, 55; noes, 163.

Mr. HILLARD, of Boston. As it is so soon after dinner, I wish to be allowed to recite, for the benefit of the Convention, and in answer to the suggestion of my friend from Salem, (Mr. Lord,) an Eastern apologue.

Once upon a time an Arab was sick unto death, and he vowed a vow to the prophet that he would offer for sale his only camel, for five pieces of gold, if he were restored to health. When he got well he felt sorely perplexed as to how he should keep his vow—a perplexity, I fancy, something like that which is experienced by the majority of the Convention, in regard to the opinions expressed, and promises heretofore made, and the mode in which they will show to the people, next November, how they have been true to those opinions and promises.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—LORD.

[August 1st.

But the way that the Arab got out of his difficulty, was this: He sent his camel to the market to be sold, but he sent it with a cat tied round its neck, and he ordered the crier to proclaim: "The camel for five pieces of gold, and the cat for one hundred, but both must be sold together." Thus there arose a saying which passed into a proverb: "How cheap the camel would be, if it were not for that cursed thing around its neck!"

So it is with the discordant provisions contained in the first proposition to be submitted to the people. The cat and the camel must be sold together. He who wants only one, must take both or none. [Laughter.]

Mr. LORD. I think the question should embrace the second, third, fourth, and fifth articles. When I moved the amendments, I only included the second, third, and fourth. I now move to add the fifth, as follows:—

ART. 5. Each city in this Commonwealth, shall be divided, by such means as the Legislature may provide, into districts of contiguous territory, as nearly equal in population as may be, for the election of representatives, which districts shall not be changed oftener than once in five years: provided, however, that no one district shall be entitled to elect more than three representatives.

As the order for the yeas and nays did not include the question on the fifth article, I hope it may, by general consent, be included without the necessity of calling for another division.

No objection was made, and the fifth article was included in the question to be taken by the yeas and nays, which were then taken, and resulted—yeas, 91; nays, 205—as follows:—

YEAS.

Abbott, Alfred A.
Adams, Benjamin P.
Aldrich, P. Emory
Aspinwall, William
Ayres, Samuel
Bartlett, Sidney
Beach, Erasmus D.
Bigelow, Jacob
Bradbury, Ebenezer
Bradford, William J. A.
Brannan, Milton P.
Bullock, Rufus
Choate, Rufus
Cogswell, Nathaniel
Cook, Charles E.
Coolidge, Henry F.
Copeland, Benjamin F.
Davis, John
Davis, Solomon
Denison, Hiram S.
Eaton, Lilley
Ely, Homer
Farwell, A. G.
Fowler, Samuel P.
French, Charles H.
Gardner, Henry J.
Gould, Robert
Goulding, Dalton
Gray, John C.
Hale, Artemas
Hammond, A. B.
Haskell, George
Hathaway, Eluthan P.
Hawkes, Stephen E.
Hayward, George
Heard, Charles
Hersey, Henry
Hewes, James
Hillard, George S.
Hooper, Foster

Hopkinson, Thomas
Houghton, Samuel
Hubbard, William J.
Hunt, William
Hurlburt, Samuel A.
Jackson, Samuel
Jenkins, John
Jenks, Samuel H.
Kellogg, Giles C.
Kuhn, George, H.
Lincoln, Abishai
Littlefield, Tristram
Livermore, Isaac
Lord, Otis P.
Lothrop, Samuel K.
Loud, Samuel P.
Lowell, John A.
Miller, Seth, Jr.
Morey, George
Morse, Joseph B.
Morton, Marcus
Noyes, Daniel
Oliver, Henry K.
Paige, James W.
Park, John G.
Parker, Adolphus G.
Parker, Joel
Perkins, Daniel A.
Perkins, Jonathan C.
Plunkett, William C.
Pomroy, Jeremiah
Putnam, George
Rantoul, Robert
Read, James
Reed, Sampson
Sargent, John
Souther, John
Stetson, Caleb
Stevens, Charles G.
Stevenson, J. Thomas

Talbot, Thomas
Thompson, Charles
Tyler, John S.
Upton, George B.
Walcott, Samuel B.
Wheeler, William F.

Wilbur, Joseph
Wildor, Joel
Wilkinson, Ezra
Williams, Henry
Wilson, Milo

NAYS.

Adams, Shubael P.
Allen, Charles
Allen, James B.
Allen, Joel C.
Alley, John B.
Allis, Josiah
Alvord, D. W.
Austin, George
Baker, Hillel
Ball, George S.
Bancroft, Alpheus
Bartlett, Russel
Barrett, Marcus
Bates, Eliakim A.
Beal, John
Bennett, William, Jr.
Bennett, Zephaniah
Bigelow, Edward B.
Bird, Francis W.
Booth, William S.
Boutwell, Geo. S.
Boutwell, Sewell
Breed, Hiram N.
Bronson, Asa
Brown, Adolphus F.
Brown, Alpheus R.
Brown, Artemas
Brown, Hammond
Brown, Hiram C.
Brownell, Frederick
Brownell, Joseph
Bryant, Patrick
Buck, Asahel
Bullen, Amos H.
Burlingame, Anson
Butler, Benjamin F.
Caruthers, William
Case, Isaac
Chandler, Amariah
Chapin, Chester W.
Chapin, Daniel E.
Chapin, Henry
Childs, Josiah
Clark, Henry
Clark, Ransom
Clark, Salah
Clarke, Alpheus B.
Clarke, Stillman
Cole, Lansing J.
Cole, Sumner
Crane, George B.
Cressy, Oliver S.
Crittenden, Simon
Cross, Joseph W.
Cushman, Henry W.
Cushman, Thomas
Cutler, Simeon N.
Dana, Richard H., Jr.
Davis, Ebenezer
Davis, Isaac
Davis, Robert T.
Dean, Silas
Deming, Elijah S.
Denton, Augustus
Duncan, Samuel
Dunham, Bradish
Durgin, John M.
Eames, Philip
Earle, John M.
Easland, Peter
Eaton, Calvin D.
Edwards, Elisha
Edwards, Samuel
Fay, Sullivan
Fellows, James K.
Fisk, Lyman
Fiske, Emory
Fowle, Samuel

Freeman, James M.
French, Charles A.
French, Rodney
French, Samuel
Gardner, Johnson
Gates, Elbridge
Gilbert, Wanton C.
Gilbert, Washington
Giles, Charles G.
Gooch, Daniel W.
Gooding, Leonard
Graves, John W.
Green, Jabez
Greene, William B.
Griswold, Josiah W.
Griswold, Whiting
Hadley, Samuel P.
Hallett, B. F.
Hagood, Seth
Harmon, Phineas
Hayden, Isaac
Hazelwell, Charles C.
Heath, Ezra, 2d.
Hewes, William H.
Heywood, Levi
Hobart, Henry
Hobbs, Edwin
Holder, Nathaniel
Hood, George
Howard, Martin
Howland, Abraham H.
Hoyt, Henry K.
Hurlburt, Moses C.
Ide, Abijah M., Jr.
Jacobs, John
Johnson, John
Kendall, Isaac
Keyes, Edward L.
Kimball, Joseph
Kingman, Joseph
Knight, Hiram
Knight, Jefferson
Knight, Joseph
Knowlton, J. S. C.
Knowlton, William H.
Knox, Albert
Ladd, Gardner P.
Langdon, Wilber C.
Lawrence, Luther
Leland, Alden
Little, Otis
Marble, William P.
Marvin, Abijah P.
Mason, Charles
Merritt, Simeon
Monroe, James L.
Moore, James M.
Morton, Elbridge G.
Morton, Marcus, Jr.
Morton, William S.
Nash, Hiram
Nayson, Jonathan
Nichols, William
Nute, Andrew T.
Orne, Benjamin S.
Osgood, Charles
Packer, E. Wing
Paine, Benjamin
Paine, Henry
Parris, Jonathan
Partridge, John
Peabody, Nathaniel
Penniman, John
Perkins, Jesse
Perkins, Noah C.
Pinney, Silvanus B.
Pierce, Henry
Putnam, John A.

Rawson, Silas
Rice, David
Richards, Luther Richardson, Daniel
Richardson, Nathan
Richardson, Samuel H.
Ring, Elkanah, Jr.
Rogers, John
Ross, David S.
Royce, James C.
Sanderson, Amasa
Sanderson, Chester
Sherril, John
Simmons, Perez
Simonds, John W.
Smith, Matthew
Sprague, Melzar
Spoonor, Samuel W.
Stacy, Eben H.
Stevens, Granville
Stevens, William
Stiles, Gideon
Taber, Isaac C.
Taft, Arnold
Thayer, Willard, 2d

ABSENT.

Abbott, Josiah G.
Allen, Parsons
Andrews, Robert
Appleton, William
Atwood, David C.
Ballard, Alvah
Banks, Nathaniel P., Jr.
Barrows, Joseph
Bates, Moses, Jr.
Beebe, James M.
Bell, Luther V.
Bishop, Henry W.
Blagden, George W.
Bliss, Gad O.
Bliss, William C.
Brewster, Osmyn
Brinley, Francis
Briggs, George N.
Bumpus, Cephas C.
Cady, Henry
Carter, Timothy W.
Churchill, J. McKean
Cleverly, William
Coggin, Jacob
Conkey, Ithamar
Crockett, George W.
Crosby, Leander
Crowell, Seth
Crownshield, T. B.
Cummings, Joseph
Curtis, Wilber
Davis, Charles G.
Daves, Henry L.
Day, Gilman
Dehon, William
DeWitt, Alexander
Doane, James C.
Dorman, Moses
Easton, James, 2d
Ely, Joseph M.
Eustis, William T.
Fitch, Ezekiel W.
Foster, Aaron
Foster, Abram
Frothingham, Rich'd, Jr.
Gale, Luther
Giles, Joel
Goulding, Jason
Greenleaf, Simon
Hale, Nathan
Hall, Charles B.
Hagood, Lyman W.
Haskins, William
Henry, Samuel
Hinsdale, William
Hobart, Aaron
Hunt, Charles E.
Huntington, Asahel
Huntington, Charles P.

Huntington, George H.
Hyde, Benjamin D.
James, William
Kellogg, Martin R.
Kinsman, Henry W.
Knowlton, Charles L.
Ladd, John S.
Lawton, Job G., Jr.
Lincoln, Frederic W., Jr.
Loomis, E. Justin
Marcy, Laban
Marvin, Theophilus R.
Meador, Reuben
Mixer, Samuel
Newman, Charles
Norton, Alfred
Ober, Joseph E.
Orcutt, Nathan
Parker, Samuel D.
Parsons, Samuel C.
Parsons, Thomas A.
Payson, Thomas E.
Peabody, George
Pease, Jeremiah, Jr.
Phelps, Charles
Pool, James M.
Powers, Peter
Preston, Jonathan
Prince, F. O.
Rockwell, Julius
Rockwood, Joseph M.
Sampson, George R.
Schouler, William
Sheldon, Luther
Sherman, Charles
Sikes, Chester
Sleeper, John S.
Stevens, Joseph L., Jr.
Storror, Charles S.
Strong, Alfred L.
Stutson, William
Sumner, Charles
Sumner, Increase
Swain, Alanson
Taylor, Ralph
Thayer, Joseph
Tilston, Edmund P.
Tilton, Horatio W.
Tower, Ephraim
Train, Charles R.
Turner, David
Turner, David P.
Upham, Charles W.
Wales, Bradford L.
Walker, Samuel
Warner, Marshall
Warner, Samuel, Jr.
Waters, Asa H.
Weeks, Cyrus

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—GARDNER—HATHAWAY—BOUTWELL—MILLER.

[August 1st.

Wetmore, Thomas Wood, William H.
Wilkins, John H. Woods, Josiah B.
Winn, Jonathan B.

Absent and not voting, 123.

Mr. GARDNER. I wish that this matter might, if possible, be sent out to the people without any contradiction of principle upon its face. The first article of this third chapter, is as follows :

ARTICLE 1. There shall be, in the Legislature of this Commonwealth, a representation of the people, annually elected, and founded upon the principle of equality.

In order to make this article consistent with the one following it, I wish to amend it thus : strike out the word "people," in the second line, and insert the words "several towns ;" and also strike out the last word in the article, "equality," and insert the words "prerogative rights." It will then read :—

ARTICLE 1. There shall be, in the Legislature of this Commonwealth, a representation of the several towns, annually elected, and founded upon the principle of prerogative rights.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not in order, being one of substance, and not of form.

No other amendment being offered, the third chapter, as amended, was finally passed, and the Secretary proceeded to read chapter four, containing provisions in relation to the governor and his title—his qualifications and tenure of office—the mode of his election, and by whom—his powers, and the powers of the council—notaries public—coroners—mode of drawing money from the treasury—the duties of public boards in regard to their returns—and, lastly—the salary of the governor, the whole chapter containing twelve articles. It is as follows :—

ARTICLE 1. There shall be a supreme executive magistrate, who shall be styled, THE GOVERNOR OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

ART. 2. The governor shall be a citizen of Massachusetts, and shall be chosen annually, by the inhabitants of the towns and cities of this Commonwealth, on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November. He shall hold his office for one year next following the first Wednesday of January, and until another is chosen and qualified in his stead. And no person shall be eligible to this office, unless, at the time of his election, he shall have been an inhabitant of this Commonwealth for seven years next preceding.

ART. 3. Those persons who shall be qualified to vote for senators and representatives, within the several towns of this Commonwealth, shall, at a meeting to be called for that purpose, on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, annually, give in their votes for a governor, to the selectmen, who shall preside at such meeting, and the town clerk, in the presence and with the assistance of the selectmen, shall, in open town meeting, sort and count the votes, and form a list of the persons voted for, with the number of votes for each person against his name ; and shall make a fair record of the same in the town books, and a public declaration thereof in the said meeting ; and shall, in the presence of the inhabitants, seal up copies of the said list, attested by him and the selectmen, and transmit the same to the sheriff of the county, thirty days at least before the first Wednesday in January ; and the sheriff shall transmit the same to the secretary's office seven days at least before the said first Wednesday in January ; or the selectmen may cause returns of the same to be made to the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth seventeen days at least before the said day ; and the secretary shall lay the same before the Senate and the House of Representatives, on the first Wednesday in January, to be by them examined ; and in case of an election, the choice shall be by them declared and published.

ART. 4. The governor shall have authority, from time to time, at his discretion, to assemble and call together the councillors of this Commonwealth for the time being ; and the governor, with the said councillors, or five of them at least, shall, and may, from time to time, hold and keep a Council, for the ordering and directing the affairs of the Commonwealth, agreeably to the Constitution and the laws of the land.

ART. 5. The governor, with advice of Council, shall have full power and authority, during the session of the General Court, to adjourn or prorogue the same to any time the two Houses shall desire ; and in the recess of the said Court, to prorogue the same from time to time, not exceeding ninety days in any one recess ; and to call it together sooner than the time to which it may be adjourned or prorogued, if the welfare of the Commonwealth shall require the same ; and in case of any infectious distemper prevailing in the place where the said Court is next, at any time to convene, or any other cause happening, whereby danger may arise to the health or lives of the members from their attendance, he may direct the session to be held at some other, the most convenient place within the State.

ART. 6. In cases of disagreement between the two Houses, with regard to the necessity, expediency or time of adjournment, or prorogation, the governor, with advice of the Council, shall have a right to adjourn or prorogue the General Court, not exceeding ninety days, as he shall determine the public good shall require.

ART. 7. The power of pardoning offences, except such as persons may be convicted of before the Senate, by an impeachment of the House, shall be in the governor, by and with the advice of Council ; but no charter of pardon, granted by the governor, with advice of the Council, before conviction, shall avail the party pleading the same, notwithstanding any general or particular expressions contained therein, descriptive of the offence or offences intended to be pardoned.

ART. 8. Notaries public shall be appointed by the governor, in the same manner as judicial officers are appointed, and shall hold their offices during seven years, unless sooner removed by the governor, with the consent of the Council, upon the address of both Houses of the General Court.

ART. 9. Coroners shall be nominated and appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Council ; and every such nomination shall be made by the governor, and made at least seven days prior to such appointment.

ART. 10. No moneys shall be issued out of the treasury of this Commonwealth and disposed of, (except such sums as may be appropriated for the redemption of bills of credit or treasurer's notes, or for the payment of interest arising thereon,) but by warrant under the hand of the governor for the time being, with the advice and consent of the Council, for the necessary defence and support of the Commonwealth ; and for the protection and preservation of the inhabitants thereof, agreeably to the acts and resolves of the General Court.

ART. 11. All public boards, the commissary-general, all superintending officers of public magazines and stores, belonging to this Commonwealth, and all commanding officers of forts and garrisons within the same, shall, once in every three months, officially and without requisition, and at other times, when required by the governor, deliver to him an account of all goods, stores, provisions, ammunition, cannon with their appendages, and small arms with their accoutrements, and of all other public property whatever under their care, respectively ; distinguishing the quantity, number, quality and kind of each, as particularly as may be ; together, with the condition of such forts and garrisons ; and the said commanding officer shall exhibit to the governor, when required by him, true and exact plans of such forts, and of the land and sea, or harbor or harbors, adjacent.

And the said boards, and all public officers, shall communicate to the governor, as soon as may be after receiving the same, all letters, despatches, and intelligences of a public nature, which shall be directed to them respectively.

ART. 12. As the public good requires that the governor should not be under the undue influence of any of the members of the General Court, by a dependence on them for his support—that he should, in all cases, act with freedom for the benefit of the public—that he should not have his attention necessarily diverted from that object to his private concerns—and that he should maintain the dignity of the Commonwealth in the character of its chief magistrate—it is necessary that he should have an honorable stated salary, of a fixed and permanent value, amply sufficient for those purposes, and established by standing laws ; and it shall be among the first acts of the General Court, after the commencement of this Constitution, to establish such salary by law accordingly.

Mr. HATHAWAY, of Freetown. As there was a question raised, and some difficulty felt upon the subject, in regard to the qualifications of members of the House of Representatives, as they existed under the amended Constitution of 1820, I wish to call the attention of the Convention to another matter about which there seems to me to be no question—that is, the qualifications of a governor. If I read the Constitution correctly as it now stands, it requires that no person shall be eligible to the office of governor, unless, at the time of his election, he has been an inhabitant of the Commonwealth for seven years next preceding such election. Here is the provision as it stands in our present Constitution :—

"The governor shall be chosen annually ; and no person shall be eligible to this office, unless, at the time of his election, he shall have been an inhabitant of this Commonwealth for seven years next preceding."

I would inquire whether there has been any action of the Convention by which that provision of our present Constitution was amended ? And if there was no such action why is it omitted here ? If I recollect rightly—and I think I am right, although I have not now the record of debates before me—when this question was asked on a former occasion, it was stated that the Committee had only reported in part. The gentleman from Worcester, (Mr. Davis,) and also my friend from Wareham, (Mr. Miller,) were on that Committee, and when I inquired in regard to this matter, it was said that everything—except those matters in which the Committee recommended a change—would be retained, and ought to be retained in the Constitution. That was my answer. Now, if there was any action of the Convention in regard to this matter changing the requirement of a seven years' residence in the election of governor, I should like to be informed what that action was, and when and under what circumstances it was had. I make no motion for any amendment, but I should certainly like to have this explained.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. I am not able to answer the gentleman from Freetown, but I think we have a resolution that will meet the case.

Mr. MILLER, of Wareham. I recollect very well when the Report first came up, the gentleman from Freetown, (Mr. Hathaway,) inquired at the time in reference to this qualification of a seven years' residence for a governor; and that I then rose in my place and stated that we intended that provision to remain in the Constitution. I have no recollection of any action of this Convention altering the determination of the Committee to whom this portion of the Constitution was referred.

Monday,] REVISED CONSTITUTION. — HATHAWAY — MILLER — BOUTWELL — DAVIS — WILSON — HALLETT. [August 1st.

Mr. HATHAWAY. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will make an inquiry. I wish to know whether the Committee of which the gentleman was one, and who had this under consideration at the time, reported any action for this Convention to take in reference to the seven years' residence.

Mr. MILLER. The Committee did not report any action on that point, but they supposed—as it is stated in the present Constitution, that the governor shall, at the time of his election, have been an inhabitant of the Commonwealth for seven years next preceding—that this provision would remain in the Constitution. That was regarded as decided upon. In the new Constitution, there is a requirement of a five years' residence in the Commonwealth to enable a person to be qualified to be a senator; and, it appears to me, that if you require a residence of five years for a senator, you should, at least, require five, if not seven years' residence in order to make a person eligible for the higher office of governor. The term "citizen of Massachusetts," I remember, was discussed very much in the Convention at the time; but I know of no action, either in Convention or in Committee, that has altered, or that was intended to alter, the present requisition of seven years in order to make a person eligible to the gubernatorial chair.

Mr. BOUTWELL. My own impression is that the Committee have made an omission, although I am not able at this moment to verify that statement. If the Convention will go on with the amendments, the Committee will ascertain, and have the matter placed right.

Mr. DAVIS, of Worcester. I will remark, that in document No. 8, the Convention will find the Report of the Committee, and will perceive what alterations the Committee recommended to the Convention. It is precisely as the gentleman from Wareham has stated; they reported to the Convention that no person except a citizen of the United States should be eligible to the office of governor; but the Convention afterwards changed it to "citizen of Massachusetts."

Mr. DANA, for Manchester. I have examined the record, and I find that the resolves in document No. 8 were amended only in two particulars—in the first resolve by striking out the words "United States," and inserting "Massachusetts," and by striking out of the last line the words: "nor shall any person be eligible to that office who shall not have attained to the age of thirty years." There was no other amendment at all, and it must have been an omission by the Committee.

Mr. HOOPER, of Fall River. It was distinctly stated in the discussion, by the gentleman from Freetown, that the other qualification would remain.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I have no doubt, upon examination of the record, that the Committee were in error. I therefore move to insert, at the close of the article, the following:—

And no person shall be eligible to this office unless, at the time of his election, he shall have been an inhabitant of this Commonwealth for seven years next preceding.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT stated that unless further amendment was proposed to the fourth chapter, the Secretary would read the fifth chapter.

The fifth chapter was accordingly read, as follows:—

ARTICLE 1. There shall be annually elected a Lieutenant-Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, who shall be qualified in the same manner with the governor; and the day and manner of his election, the qualifications of the voters, the return of the votes, and the declaration of the election, shall be the same as in the election of a governor.

[And the lieutenant-governor shall hold his office for one year next following the first Wednesday of January, and until another is chosen and qualified in his stead.]

ART. 2. The governor, and in his absence, the lieutenant-governor, shall be president of the Council, but shall have no vote in Council; and the lieutenant-governor shall always be a member of the Council, except when the chair of the governor shall be vacant.

ART. 3. Whenever, by reason of sickness or absence from the Commonwealth, or otherwise, the governor shall be unable to perform his official duties, the lieutenant-governor, for the time being, shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, and perform all the duties of governor; and whenever the chair of the governor shall be vacant, by reason of his resignation, death, or removal from office, the lieutenant-governor shall be governor of the Commonwealth.

No amendment being proposed to the fifth chapter, the Secretary read the sixth chapter, as follows:—

ARTICLE 1. There shall be a Council for advising the governor in the executive part of the government, to consist of eight persons besides the lieutenant-governor, whom the governor for the time being, shall have full power and authority, from time to time, at his discretion, to assemble and call together; and the governor, with the said councillors, or five of them at least, shall and may, from time to time, hold and keep a Council, for the ordering and directing the affairs of the Commonwealth, according to the laws of the land.

[ART. 2. Eight councillors shall be annually chosen by the people; and for that purpose the State shall be divided by the General Court into eight districts, each district to consist of five contiguous senatorial districts, and entitled to elect one councillor, who shall hold his office for one year next following the first Wednesday in January, and until a successor is chosen and qualified in his stead.]

ART. 3. No person shall be elected a councillor who has not been an inhabitant of this Commonwealth for the term of five years immediately preceding his election.

[ART. 4. The day and manner of the election of councillors, the qualifications of the voters, the return of the votes, and the declaration of the elections, shall be the same as are required in the election of senators; and the person having the highest number of votes shall be declared to be elected.]

ART. 5. No councillor, during the time for which he is elected, shall be appointed on any commission or to any place and receive compensation therefor.]

ART. 6. The councillors, in the civil arrangements of the Commonwealth, shall have rank next after the lieutenant-governor.

ART. 7. The resolutions and advice of the Council shall be recorded in a register, and signed by the members present; and any member of the Council may insert his opinion contrary to the resolution of the majority. This record shall always be subject to public examination, and may be called for by either House of the Legislature.

ART. 8. Whenever the office of the governor and lieutenant-governor shall be vacant, by reason of death, absence, or otherwise, then the Council, or the major part of them, shall, during such vacancy, have full power and authority, to do, and execute all and every such acts, matters and things, as the governor or the lieutenant-governor might or could, by virtue of this Constitution, do or execute, if they, or either of them, were personally present.

Mr. WILSON, of Natick. It seems to me that there is an omission in the second article. It provides that eight councillors shall be annually chosen by the people, and for that purpose the State shall be divided by the general court into eight districts, each district to consist of five contiguous senatorial districts, and entitled to elect one councillor, &c. It seems to me that there should be a provision in addition, and I will move to add, after the word "court," the following words: "holden next after the adoption of this Constitution, and next after each decennial census thereafter," so that it will read:—

ART. 2. Eight councillors shall be annually chosen by the people; and for that purpose the State shall be divided by the General Court holden next after the adoption of this Constitution, and next after each decennial census thereafter, into eight districts, each district to consist of five contiguous senatorial districts, and entitled to elect one councillor, who shall hold his office for one year next following the first Wednesday in January, and until a successor is chosen and qualified in his stead.

By the adoption of this amendment it will be in the power of the legislature to change the councillor districts whenever they see fit.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment is not in order. It is an amendment of substance and not of form.

Mr. HALE, of Boston. I will ask if, in the engrossed form, the orthography of this edition will be followed? If so, I move to amend it so that the word "councillor," wherever it occurs, shall be spelled as in the original Constitution. It is here spelled with a c instead of an s.

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham. As one of the Committee, I will say that this was a subject of very grave consideration before the Committee. If the gentleman will consult the original orthography, I think he will find that the word is spelled with a c. It appears to be the proper word, too; they are not counsellors at law or barristers—they are simply councillors, who surround the governor.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly it is in the power of the Convention to coin a word; but the word councillor, in the English language, is always spelled with an "s." I therefore move that "councillor" be stricken out, and "counsellor" inserted in its stead.

Mr. OLIVER, of Lawrence. It strikes me that it would not be correct to have it spelled in that way. These gentlemen are members of the Council, and they sit in council together. They are not members of a counsel, and therefore they are not counsellors. I think there is excellent authority to sustain this mode of spelling the word; and if I am not greatly mistaken, it was so spelled in the original draft of the Constitution of this Commonwealth. That is the way that the Privy Council of England is spelled, almost universally.

Monday,] REVISED CONSTITUTION.—JENKS—BIRD—HALLETT—DENTON—BUTLER—LORD—BOUTWELL. [August 1st.

Mr. JENKS, of Boston. I have always looked upon this orthography of the word "councillor," as a matter of affectation, and I do not think it is worth while for us to continue to use this now fangled word which has been manufactured within a few years. I think "counsellor" is the proper word, and in my opinion that is the way in which it was originally spelled. I am in favor of the amendment, for I think it is a mere matter of affectation to spell it "councillor."

Mr. BIRD, of Walpole. This is not, perhaps, a very vital matter, but I am of opinion, that as long as we have taken it up, it may be as well to have it settled correctly, and I believe that "counsellor" is the real way in which this word should be spelled. If you say that it should be spelled "councillor" as derived from "council," I will admit, that a word may be coined, and of course, when a new word is coined, there is no particular rule by which it can be decided that one mode of spelling is right and another is wrong. I hold, that "counsellor" is derived from "counsel," which means to give advice; and as these men are appointed for the purpose of giving advice to the governor, they should be termed counsellors. It is not a very important matter, and it may have been rather an inadvertence of the printers or the copyist, than an intentional mode of spelling the word.

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham. Not at all. This subject was considered by the Committee, and the question was decided by them; so they are responsible for the orthography. I will add that in the original charter, it is spelled "councillor" in some places, and in others it is spelled "counsellor." These men are not counsellors—they are not kings' attorneys, but they are councillors as distinctive from the legal profession.

The question being taken, the amendment was not agreed to.

No further amendment being proposed to the sixth chapter, the Secretary read the seventh chapter, as follows:—

[ARTICLE 1. The secretary, treasurer, auditor and attorney-general, shall be chosen by the people, annually on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November; and they shall hold their offices, respectively, for one year next following the first Wednesday in the succeeding January, and until their successors are chosen and qualified in their stead.

The day and manner of their election, the qualifications of the voters, the return of the votes, and the declaration of the elections, shall be the same as are required in the election of governor.]

ART. 2. No man shall be eligible as treasurer, more than five years successively.

ART. 3. The records of the Commonwealth shall be kept in the office of the secretary, who may appoint his deputies, for whose conduct he shall be accountable; and he shall attend the governor and Council, the Senate and House of Representatives, in person, or by his deputies, as they shall respectively require.

[ART. 4. Judges of probate, registers of probate, sheriffs, clerks of the courts, commissioners of insolvency, district-attorneys, registers of deeds, county treasurers, and county commissioners, shall be elected triennially by the people of their respective counties and districts, on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, and shall hold their offices, respectively, for three years next following the first Wednesday in the succeeding January, and until their respective successors are chosen and qualified in their stead.

The manner of their election, the qualifications of the voters, the return of the votes, and the declaration of the elections, shall be the same as are required in the election of senators; and the person having the highest number of votes shall be elected.]

Mr. DENTON, of Chelsea, moved, that after the words "county commissioners," in the fourth line of article four, the words "except for the county of Suffolk" be inserted.

Mr. HALLETT. Upon an examination of that subject, I have no question that there is no change at all affected by this Constitution. The city treasurer of Boston is chosen under the existing law. This only requires that when there shall be a county treasurer, he shall be chosen as provided for in the Constitution.

Mr. DENTON. I speak of county commissioners. A portion of Suffolk County has been set off from the county of Middlesex, and as I understand, the chairman of the Committee which reported these resolves was unaware that there had been a division. The mayor and aldermen are county commissioners of the city of Boston, which is a portion of the county of Suffolk. The three remaining towns are attached to the county of Middlesex. I understand that the chairman of the Committee thinks there is a doubt, if action is taken upon the resolution as presented to the Convention, whether it would not put Chelsea and North Chelsea precisely where they were before, separate from the county of Middlesex.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the amendment one of substance and not one of form.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. Lest there should be trouble so far as that matter is concerned, I call the attention of the Convention to the language of the article. It says that "county treasurers and county commissioners shall be elected triennially by the people of their respective counties and districts," &c. Now the legislature have set off Chelsea and North Chelsea each to Middlesex, and they, with the county of Middlesex, make a district for the purpose of choosing commissioners. So that I do not see the trouble which is suggested by the gentleman from Chelsea, that it can only be the people of a county who elect a commissioner. The language is, "chosen in their respective districts."

Mr. LORD, of Salem. I had the idea when the matter was under consideration, that the county of Suffolk was excepted; and, if in reality the county of Suffolk was excepted, they ought to be excepted in this provision. I do not know that I am right, but I think that county commissioners, so far as Boston was concerned, were excepted upon the motion of the gentleman who represents Wilbraham, (Mr. Hallett). Now, it seems to me that if they were, they ought to be here, because I do not agree at all to the construction which is now given to this clause by the gentleman for Wilbraham, that until the office of county commissioner shall be created for the county of Suffolk, it does not devolve upon the people to choose one. I think if the duties of that office are performed by another tribunal, that tribunal must be elected precisely in the same manner as is provided for the election of county commissioners, otherwise it will be competent for the legislature to alter the Constitution, simply by changing the name of the officer, and putting upon him the duties imposed upon the county commissioners. Suppose that instead of there being county commissioners, the legislature should create a body of county selectmen, and place upon them the precise duties which now belong to county commissioners. Now, having imposed the duties of county commissioners upon the selectmen of the county, those duties being the same as those of county commissioners, it seems to me that the Constitution would require that they shall be elected in the mode pointed out in the Constitution for the election of county commissioners, and that their appointment could not be given to the governor, because, if otherwise, every officer that you have made elective by the people can be appointed by the governor, simply by the legislature changing the name of the officer, and imposing upon him the same duties as the other officer. If the construction which I give to it is the true one, then the mayor and aldermen of the city of Boston must be elected for the term of three years, unless an exception is made in their favor, which was made in the Committee of the Whole, when the subject was under consideration. I think the exception was made there, though I have no distinct recollection about it. I wish to stand upon the action of the Convention, whatever it is.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. I have a certified copy of the proceedings of the Convention, but the exception was not made.

Mr. LORD. I knew the action of the Convention was reversed as to county treasurer, but as to county commissioners I did not know.

Mr. BOUTWELL. As some gentlemen desire that the title of this seventh chapter should be made more explicit, I move to amend it, so that it shall read: "Secretary, Treasurer, Attorney-General, Auditor, District-Attorneys, and County Officers."

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Secretary then proceeded to read the next chapter, being chapter eight, entitled "Judiciary Power," which is as follows:—

[ARTICLE 1. The judicial power of the Commonwealth shall be vested in a Supreme Judicial Court, and such other courts as the legislature may from time to time establish.]

ART. 2. The tenure that all commission officers shall by law have in their offices, shall be expressed in their respective commissions.

All judicial officers, duly appointed, commissioned and sworn, shall hold their offices for the term of ten years, excepting such concerning whom there is different provision made in this Constitution. And upon the expiration of such term they may be reappointed; and all judicial officers for whose appointment a different provision is not made in this Constitution, shall be nominated and appointed by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Council, and they may be removed by the Governor, with consent of the Council, upon the address of both Houses of the Legislature.

[ART. 3. The present justices of the Supreme Judicial Court shall hold their offices according to their respective commissions; and the present justices of the Court of Common Pleas shall hold their offices by the same tenure, while the law establishing the said Court of Common Pleas shall continue. All nominations of judicial officers, whose term of office is by this Constitution limited to ten years, shall be publicly announced at least seven days before their appointment; and no person who shall have been commissioned after the tenth day of August, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, shall hold by any longer tenure of office than the term of ten years.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION. — CHOATE.

[August 1st.

ART. 4. Neither the Governor and Council, nor the two branches of the Legislature, or either of them, shall hereafter propose questions to justices of the Supreme Judicial Court, and require their opinions thereon.]

ART. 5. The judges of probate of wills, and for granting letters of administration, shall hold their courts at such place or places, on fixed days, as the convenience of the people shall require; and the Legislature shall from time to time, hereafter, appoint such times and places; until which appointments, the said courts shall be held at the times and places which the respective judges shall direct.

[ART. 6. Justices of the peace, justices of the peace and quorum, justices of the peace throughout the Commonwealth, and commissioners to qualify civil officers, may be appointed by the governor and Council for a term of seven years; and upon the expiration of any commission, the same may be renewed; and those now in office shall continue therein according to the tenure of their respective commissions: provided, that the jurisdiction of the justices named in this article, shall not extend to the hearing or trial of any causes, or the issuing of warrants in criminal cases.

ART. 7. Trial justices shall be elected by the legal voters of the several towns and cities, where, at the time of such election there is no Police Court established by law, who shall hold their offices for a term of three years, and have the same jurisdiction, powers, and duties, as are now exercised by justices of the peace, or such as may hereafter be established by law. Every city or town, authorized as herein provided, shall elect a trial justice, and may elect one additional for each two thousand inhabitants therein, according to the next preceding decennial census: provided, however, that any trial justice who shall remove from the city or town in which he was elected shall thereby vacate his office.

ART. 8. Justices and clerks of the Police Courts of the several cities and towns of the Commonwealth shall be elected by the legal voters thereof, respectively, for a term of three years.]

Mr. CHOATE, of Boston. I beg to offer an amendment, which I have drawn with some little care, and extended, therefore, into several parts, though constituting an entire amendment altogether, for the purpose merely of transferring the change proposed to be made by the Convention in the matter of judicial tenure of office, from the body of the Constitution, where it must be voted for along with everything else, for the purpose, I say, of transferring that subject, into that part of the amendments proposed to be submitted separately to the people, so that it may be separately acted upon by the people, and by the individual voter.

As I understood the learned chairman, (Mr. Boutwell,) this morning, to suggest, that he should himself favor the separate submission of everything to the individual voter—which, it can be shown, may be practicably and properly done—I anticipate his support. I have paid some little attention to the details of this motion, and I count upon his coöperation. I propose, then, without sending the amendments to the Chair at present, to strike out, as follows: In the first place, strike out article thirty of the Bill of Rights, which is:—

ART. 30. It is essential to the preservation of the rights of every individual, his life, liberty, property, and character, that there be an impartial interpretation of the laws, and administration of justice. It is the right of every citizen to be tried by judges as free, impartial, and independent, as the lot of humanity will admit. It is therefore not only the best policy, but for the security of the rights of the people, and of every citizen, that the Judges of the Supreme Judicial Court should hold their offices by tenures established by the Constitution, and should have honorable salaries, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Then strike out of article two, in this chapter eight, the following:—

All judicial officers, duly appointed, commissioned and sworn, shall hold their offices for the term of ten years, excepting such concerning whom there is different provision made in this Constitution. And upon the expiration of such term they may be reappointed.

Strike out all of article three, as follows:—

ART. 3. The present justices of the Supreme Judicial Court shall hold their offices according to their respective commissions; and the present justices of the Court of Common Pleas shall hold their offices by the same tenure, while the law establishing the said Court of Common Pleas shall continue. All nominations of judicial officers, whose term of office is by this Constitution limited to ten years, shall be publicly announced at least seven days before their appointment: and no person who shall have been commissioned after the tenth day of August, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, shall hold by any longer tenure of office than the term of ten years.

The effect will be to remove from this portion of the Constitution which the Committee have numbered "one," everything which applies to a change in the judicial tenure, and nothing else. It will take that bodily from the position in which it now stands.

I then respectfully propose that you shall insert, on page forty of this printed Report of the Committee, under heads "nine," "ten," "eleven," and "twelve," the following, constituting one distinct provision and proposition, and those will be exactly what will have been removed, by the first branch of my proposed amendment, from number "one," that is to say, having struck out what I have indicated, then insert, as the ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth paragraphs, what I will have the honor to read. They are nothing, but in their very terms, the provisions which the proposition to strike out, will have struck out. Supposing, then, that part of the amendment to have been adopted, and that nothing remains in number "one," upon the subject of the judicial tenure, then the following propositions will cover that ground exactly in the language of the Committee, and embrace what the Convention has done.

Ninth. All judicial officers, duly appointed, commissioned and sworn, shall hold their offices for the term of ten years, excepting such concerning whom there is different provision made in this Constitution. And upon the expiration of any such term, they may be reappointed.

If this proposition be ratified and adopted, it shall be in addition to the chapter on the judiciary power.

Tenth. The present justices of the Supreme Judicial Court shall hold their offices according to their respective commissions; and the present justices of the Court of Common Pleas shall hold their offices by the same tenure, while the law establishing the said Court of Common Pleas shall continue. All nominations of judicial officers, whose term of office is by this Constitution limited to ten years, shall be publicly announced at least seven days before their appointment: and no person who shall have been commissioned after the tenth day of August, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, shall hold by any longer tenure of office than the term of ten years.

If this proposition be ratified and adopted, it shall be in addition to the chapter on the judiciary power.

Eleventh. It is essential to the preservation of the rights of every individual, his life, liberty, property, and character, that there be an impartial interpretation of the laws, and administration of justice. It is the right of every citizen to be tried by judges as free, impartial, and independent, as the lot of humanity will admit. It is therefore not only the best policy, but for the security of the rights of the people, and of every citizen, that the Judges of the Supreme Judicial Court should hold their offices by tenures established by the Constitution, and should have honorable salaries, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

If this proposition is ratified and adopted, it shall be in addition to the Declaration of Rights.

Twelfth. That all tenure of judicial office which shall not be changed by the Constitution, shall remain as heretofore.

This last proposition is indispensable, to meet a difficulty suggested by my friend for Manchester, (Mr. Dana,) in consultation with him, for it may happen that number "one" of the proposed amendments, may be adopted. If number "one" should be rejected, and this particular amendment should be rejected also, there might be a Constitution left without any tenure of office.

It is a part of this scheme of amendments, Mr. President, that the provisions respecting the limitation of judicial tenure, as proposed to be numbered progressively, nine, ten, eleven, and twelve, are to be considered as distinct propositions, to be adopted in the whole or rejected in the whole, as the people think proper. Now, having indicated what will unquestionably be the judicial effect of this amendment, I do not intend to detain the Convention with but a word in its favor. It simply, fairly, and in good faith, without modifying in the least degree the substantial action of this Convention, enables every voter in Massachusetts to express his own opinion, directly, upon so substantial, so distinct and important a proposition as to change the judicial tenure, uncoerced by its connection with any other subject—to the intent that every voter shall exercise his own reason and free will upon a subject distinct from every other branch of the entire subject committed to him—a proposition so reasonable, that, unless it is attended with the technical difficulty indicated this morning, by the honorable chairman of the Committee, would meet with universal approbation. It should be borne in mind—and it strikes me that it is a principle which should govern us—that we had to perform a distinct branch of duty. We were to express, and procure to be adopted—if we could—by this Convention, our own opinions concerning amendments to the Constitution. That duty we have been engaged in arduously for ninety days, and we have done it. We have conferred upon it, we have voted upon it, we have accomplished it, and we have completely and in good faith, finished that branch of our duties, the expression of our own opinions touching amendments to the Constitution. The other piece of work submitted to us, and to which we have now arrived, is exactly to enable the people to do their part of the great concurrent work, in amending the Constitution, in the best practicable manner, on their part. And I apprehend that nobody can feel any desire whatever, to give it such a direction before the people, as shall lay them under coercion to adopt our views whether they like them or not. We should all feel, and should all cooperate to bring the matter before them in such a shape that they will express their own views exactly, without coercion, from any of its connections.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—CHOATE—HALLETT—DANA—LORD.

[August 1st.

I hope, therefore, that unless my friend for Manchester, (Mr. Dana,) who has, I believe, been engaged more particularly with the consideration of the details of this part of the general subject, and with the composition of the amendments which are to be presented, should indicate some greater difficulties than I yet imagine exist, this particular amendment may be separately considered. The present is not the time to say a single word on the merits of the question, nor is it necessary. In regard to that, the Convention has already formed its opinion; but, I would suggest that this change in the nature of the judicial tenure, is a matter wholly new to everybody in the Commonwealth—that it is an innovation on our ancient usages that was not extensively canvassed before the Convention met—that it is a matter of vast importance to the whole community—and that it is easily separated from the rest of the Constitution.

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham. I rise for the purpose of suggesting to the gentleman from Boston, the inquiry whether the thirtieth article of the Bill of Rights may not be left standing as it is; because, as it is there, it is entirely in the alternative, and is to be adapted either to the old or the new Constitution.

Mr. CHOATE. Suppose, for instance, that the whole of this resolve, which you call number one—embracing the great bulk of the Constitution—should be rejected by the people, then there is no such article there. No such article remains, and the old article in the old Constitution, commissioning the judges for good behavior, and this amendment would also remain, commissioning them under a ten years' tenure.

Mr. HALLETT. Then you might reject the whole of the first, and part of the last. I say to the gentleman from Boston, that I will go with him upon this point, if it is possible to make this provision a separate question, so that the remainder of the Constitution remains entire. I am not able to say whether the Constitution will bear that separation; but, as I have said before, if it can be submitted to the people without marring the symmetry of the instrument as a whole, whether it is adopted or rejected, I will go with the gentleman for his proposition.

Mr. DANA, for Manchester. Having been somewhat appealed to by the learned attorney-general, I feel bound to speak to the subject matter which he has brought before the Convention. It is certainly true, that the amendment we have adopted altering the tenure of the office of supreme judges from a life tenure to a tenure of only ten years duration, is a material change in the Constitution. I trust that some of the members of this body will remember that I was not in favor of this change, and if it were to go as a separate proposition before the people, I should vote against it. As one of the Committee of Revision, I was in the hope that we should be able to put all these propositions separately to the people. But, after a more careful examination of the matter, I came to the conclusion that we could not put any of them as separate propositions, except such as were entirely new and independent. The gentleman for Wilbraham thought we could; but he afterwards changed his opinion. I gave early notice of this effect. During the debate on the subject of the judiciary, I said to the Convention that if these changes in the judicial tenure were made, they would have to be submitted to the people with all the rest of the propositions, as a unit. I gave that as a reason against adopting a change on which no public opinion had been expressed. I have not been able since then, to change my opinion. The learned attorney-general has brought before us a proposition that will do it, if anything human can. I have tried, myself, to invent or discover a mode by which it could be done; and doubtless the learned attorney-general has gone far beyond me in his plan; but I confess that I do not see the way clear yet. He proposes to divide all that relates to the judicial tenure embraced in the chapter on the judiciary, from the rest of the Constitution, and to present it as a separate resolution, to be called number nine. This embraces four distinct sections or articles. The first, relates to the ten years' tenure; the second, to the tenure of the present judges; the third, is the thirtieth article of the Bill of Rights; and the last, is a new proposition, which I suppose the Chair will be obliged to rule out of order, at this time.

Now, the principle upon which we have gone, and which the chairman of the Committee has so clearly illustrated, is this: that the Constitution of 1780 has thirteen amendments, many of them amendments upon amendments, rendering the construction of the Constitution extremely difficult. We wish to have a symmetrical instrument, so that every officer in the Commonwealth may find everything he wants to find, under its proper caption, without being obliged to hunt over the Constitution of 1780, and all the amendments from that day to this, to find what he ought to be able to find in a moment. We wish to secure this result. For this purpose, the new Constitution must go entire to the people.

It was truly said by the chairman of the Committee, that number "one" must contain all that is necessary for the working of the government. Now, the learned attorney-general will admit that the judicial tenure is one of the essential provisions of every Constitution. Yet he proposes to strike out from proposition number one, all the provisions relating to the judicial tenure, so that if number one alone is accepted, and nine, ten, eleven, and twelve are rejected, we shall have a Constitution without any provision for a judicial tenure. With a Constitution so defective, it might be left to the legislature, to regulate the judicial tenure; but, would he be willing to leave to the legislature the power to regulate the tenure of the judges? I think not. If we did not do that, then we must go back to the Constitution of 1780 for our judicial tenure, reviving it, by construction. Which of these courses would be followed, I cannot guess; but put it at the best, and suppose the old Constitution to revive.

The result would be, that all the old Constitution would be revived, for there is no power short of the people which can say to what portion of the Constitution of 1780 we shall go to find which relates to the judicial tenure. The whole Constitution would therefore be printed and kept alive. Now, I submit to the gentleman whether it would be worth while to send out a Constitution without a provision for a judicial tenure, and then to say to the people, when they want to know the tenure of the judges, "Look to the Constitution of 1780, and if that is not the proper place to look for it, then leave the matter to the legislature?" I cannot think that this will be done. If the people accept that part of the Constitution which we call number one, and reject nine, ten, eleven, and twelve, then we have no provision in regard to a judicial tenure. The question then would be, whether that tenure should be left to the legislature, or whether we are to grope for it in the Constitution of 1780, with its amendments. In that Constitution, the judicial tenure is mentioned in two or three places; and the difficulty would be that that Constitution would necessarily, so far, be in existence, if that supposition be a correct one. If it is not, then it would necessarily be left to the legislature, and that objection, to my mind, would be fatal.

But there are other objections. Suppose that the Constitution of 1853—which for convenience we call number one—should be rejected, and the twelve resolutions should be accepted; what kind of a Constitution would you have? It would declare in the most solemn manner, the life tenure of the judges to be essential to their impartiality, and then, in the thirty-second article it would present the contradictory provision that they should only hold them for ten years. That would be an inconsistency, from which I should think the good taste of the gentleman would lead him to shrink.

Moreover, if the first proposition is rejected, and this proposition is accepted, then the ninth proposition would be inconsistent with the Bill of Rights; the one saying that the office should be held for life, and the other for ten years. The tenth proposition would say that the present judges should hold their offices according to their commissions. That would be right, undoubtedly. I think there is no objection to that. The eleventh article would insert a provision which would be inconsistent with the Bill of Rights, as I have mentioned. If I could see my way clear, in the amendment of the gentleman from Boston, I would certainly go for it; but at present, I must confess that everything in regard to it presents nothing but darkness and difficulty to my mind. And if we, who have studied the subject, find it complicated and difficult of adjustment, how will it strike the voters at the polls?

Mr. LORD, of Salem. I believe that the difficulty of the delegate who represents Manchester, arises from not considering that it is necessary to do something to make an amendment to the third and fourth resolutions, which will become necessary in consequence of the adoption of these articles as put separately; and if he will consider for one moment, he will see that there is no difficulty whatever in the proposition which the very distinguished gentleman from Boston submits. In the first place, he will perceive that when the people vote, they will either accept both, reject

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—LORD—BOUTWELL—SCHOULER—WHITNEY—CHOATE.

[August 1st.]

both, or accept one and reject the other, or reject one and accept the other. There are, then, four different ways in which the people can act upon them.

Mr. DANA, (in his seat). The people may accept part, and reject part.

Mr. LORD. No, Sir; the four go together, as one proposition, being all one system. If, therefore, it can be made clear that whatever action the people may take, it will leave a perfectly sound Constitution throughout, with a sound judiciary system, then the gentleman for Manchester will find his whole end answered. I submit, Sir, that it will be proper to add this provision to the resolution: If number one is adopted and ratified by the people, and nine, ten, eleven, and twelve are rejected, then number twenty-nine in the Bill of Rights of the present Constitution shall be considered as number thirty in the Bill of Rights of the new Constitution. With this suggestion, let us see how it will operate in either alternative: If the people accept both propositions, then the gentleman for Manchester himself will be satisfied that it will be a perfect system. If the people reject them both, there will be no difficulty; because, having rejected them both, the old Constitution will stand just as it does now. We see, then, that if either both are accepted or both rejected, there is no trouble. Now, suppose they accept number one as the new Constitution, and reject these four propositions, nine, ten, eleven and twelve; what will be the state of things then? You will have your judiciary power. You will have article one, which says that "the judicial power of the Commonwealth shall be vested in a supreme judicial court, and such other courts as the legislature may from time to time establish." You will have article two, which says that "the tenure that all commission officers shall by law have in their offices, shall be expressed in their respective commissions." Then what else will you have? You will have the old twenty-ninth article of the Bill of Rights restored as the thirtieth article of the Bill of Rights of this Constitution, declaring a judicial tenure for life, or during good behavior. You will therefore have a perfect Constitution, harmonious and consistent, if the people accept this, and reject the other. But suppose they reject number one, and accept the other, what will you have in that case? Then, of course, having rejected the new Constitution, the old Constitution stands as the Constitution of the Commonwealth; but, having accepted an amendment which is, to some extent, inconsistent with that, as every amendment is supposed to be, that amendment stands just exactly as other amendments stand, which have changed the old Constitution in some particular respects. To my mind it is perfectly clear, that if you adopt this provision and put into the resolve the words which I have now suggested, the Constitution will be a perfect system, no matter what action the people may take with regard to the adoption or rejection of these amendments. I submit to the discriminating mind of the gentleman who represents Manchester, that there can be no difficulty whatever.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. This proposition is so very complicated, that gentlemen for a considerable time may disagree as to what its effect is; and what I have to say is rather in the way of suggestion. If the proposition of the gentleman from Boston shall be entertained by the Convention, and his numbers nine, ten, eleven and twelve, shall be submitted to the people, we also submit number one, which stands in place of the old Constitution. If, then, numbers nine, ten, eleven and twelve, are rejected, the result is, that your thirtieth article of the Bill of Rights is gone altogether. But suppose we submit number one to the people, without the second clause of article second, article third of the chapter on the judiciary power in the present Constitution passes away; and if the proposition of the gentleman from Boston is rejected, that passes away, and then what will you have? You declare in the Constitution that the judicial power of the Commonwealth shall be vested in a supreme judicial court, and such other courts as the legislature may from time to time establish; but you have no provision how your judges shall be appointed, so far as I can see at this moment. Are they to be elected by the people in that case? I presume that would be a question for the legislature to determine; and thus, instead of settling the mode of election by the people in the Constitution, you leave it for legislative action. And you have stricken out the provision in the third article of the proposed Constitution, which declares that the judges may be removed by the governor, with the consent of the council, upon the address of both branches of the legislature; so that according to this, whether the proposition of the gentleman from Boston be adopted or rejected by the people, as the former Constitution will have passed away, you will have a Constitution without any power whatever to remove a judge by the address of both branches of the legislature. I make these remarks by way of suggestion, in order to show the complicated nature of the proposition of the gentleman from Boston. I cannot tell how I should regard it if we had time to give it a deliberate examination; but it seems to me so complicated that it cannot probably be fully comprehended by this Convention to-day.

Mr. SCHOULER, of Boston. I would like to ask the gentleman for Berlin a question. If we strike out all with regard to the judiciary, according to the proposition of the gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Choate,) and if the people should adopt the Constitution in this form, and at the same time reject the propositions of my distinguished colleague, I want to know whether that part of the old Constitution which relates to the judiciary, would not stand as a part of the new Constitution?

Mr. BOUTWELL. That would not stand unless this Convention should make that exception in proposition number one, because it is expressly declared that proposition number one shall take the place of the existing Constitution of the Commonwealth. But if the idea that exists in the mind of the gentleman from Boston, should be the idea of this Convention, then what have you? You have now a Constitution without proper provisions for the existence and working of the judiciary power, and in order to remedy that evil, what do you do? You bring back into life again the Constitution of 1780 and all its amendments; and what the judiciary power is, as provided in that Constitution, no man can tell, unless he has the whole instrument with all the amendments and provisions before him. For my part, I cannot see how this proposition can be submitted in the manner proposed by my friend from Boston, without working infinite evil in some one of these ways which I have suggested, if not in other ways which may be seen when it shall be more fully examined.

Mr. WHITNEY, of Boylston. The system of the gentleman from Boston may be very beautiful—I have no doubt it is—but it is too complicated for this time. We have no opportunity to examine it and to understand it; and I hope, therefore, that his amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. CHOATE, of Boston. A single word, Mr. President. This is to some extent an expression of opinion against opinion; and when I shall have repeated the expression of my own, in entire concurrence with that of my friend from Salem, availing myself of his very clear and lucid exposition of the matter, I shall have said all that I have to say on the present occasion. As I understand the chairman of the Committee and my friend for Manchester, there is but one single contingency in which any difficulty can be apprehended. Let us see what that difficulty is, and in one single word, what the answer to it is. The difficulty which is expected, is, that resolution number one may be adopted by the people, and these amendments may be rejected; and thereupon they suppose that the people will have repealed and abrogated the old Constitution, and will have made a new Constitution, in which they will have made no provision at all for the tenure of judicial offices. Let me repeat it, in order that we may see whether the answer to this difficulty is not entirely satisfactory. By the adoption of resolution number one, the old Constitution will have ceased to be, because the proposition numbered one becomes the Constitution of the Commonwealth, and displaces the other, of course. The amendments which I now offer as numbers nine, ten and eleven, however, being rejected, and the Convention having first stricken from number one those three provisions which prescribe the judicial tenure of ten years, the difficulty which they fear is, that they shall be left with judicial offices having no tenure whatever prescribed. Now, I respectfully submit, that there are three several answers to this difficulty, to which I imagine that every legal mind and sober understanding will entirely assent. In the first place, we are to suppose that the people will do nothing at all capricious in regard to what we are about to submit to them; and therefore I reason upon the supposition that article number twelve will also be adopted and become a part of the new Constitution. That article provides that all tenures of judicial offices which are not changed by the Constitution, shall remain as heretofore. Very well; then you have got a new Constitution as contained in proposition number one; but you have made no change in the tenure of judicial offices, because that part of number one which undertook to make a change, has been stricken out of number one and placed in the appendix. You will have a new Constitution, abolishing the old one, it is true; but the new Constitution makes no change in the tenure of judicial offices, and therefore by the force of my own amendment, all these tenures being unchanged, remain as heretofore. In order, then, to know what is the existing tenure of judicial offices, it will not be necessary to go back to trace the history of the past two hundred years, for the provisions of the present Constitution on that subject are well understood, and no change will take place.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—BOUTWELL—CHOATE—DANA—LORD—HALLETT.

[August 1st.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. It may be that I do not understand the proposition of the gentleman; but my point is this: If proposition number one is accepted, it becomes the Constitution of the State; but if the propositions of the gentleman from Boston are rejected, that one which provides for a judicial tenure is rejected with the rest.

Mr. CHOATE. In the first place, I do not apprehend anything like capricious action upon the part of the people of this Commonwealth. I presume them to be, in the main, intelligent, and I presume them to act thus. If they make a new Constitution which establishes no change whatever in the judicial tenure, and which intentionally omits to change the judicial tenure, and if, at the same time, they reject the separate proposition which does make that change, they will of course desire that the tenure shall remain as it is, and will adopt my amendment, numbered twelve.

The second answer I submit on the suggestion which I adopt very cheerfully from my friend from Salem, (Mr. Lord); and that is, that in a certain contingency, which is contemplated by the honorable chairman of the Committee, article number twenty-nine, in the present Bill of Rights shall be revived and considered as article thirty in the Bill of Rights of the new Constitution. Then you will have not only your new Constitution, as contained in proposition number one, making in itself no change in the judicial tenure, but you will also have the twenty-ninth article of the old Bill of Rights, adopted by the same popular act, and declaring that the judges of the supreme judicial court shall hold their offices during good behavior. Thus, in either mode, unless you suppose the conduct of the people will be capricious, unsystematic, and unintelligent in the last degree, the difficulty suggested by the gentleman will be obviated.

But there is a third reason upon which I may very well stand, in point of fact. The effect of such a state of things as the gentleman has hypothesized, will be exactly this—that the existing Constitution will not have been changed at all in the matter of judicial tenures; and when you become satisfied of that fact, it follows, as a principle of universal jurisprudence, that the old Constitution, so far as it is unchanged by what you do, remains entirely unaffected, and in full force. I remember very well, that that principle was advanced, and I listened to an argument of great learning and power based upon it, in the Convention in the State of New York. The question was there raised, what would be the state of things if the new Constitution should not completely abrogate the old, but become part and parcel of it. And I understood the doctrine to have been—the argument was conducted by Mr. Wheaton—that, as a matter of course, if, on collating the new work with the old one, you should find that you have not changed the old Constitution or law—whether it be Constitution, statute, or treaty, or whatever it may be—it remains entirely unaffected. So it does seem to me that the contingency which the ingenuity of gentlemen have discovered, can never happen, and therefore is not a ground of rational objection.

Mr. DANA, for Manchester. I wish to get at a full understanding of this question, so that we may know what we accept or reject. I ask the gentleman whether I understand him as saying that he intends to put the four propositions out to the people as one, to stand or fall together?

Mr. CHOATE. All together.

Mr. DANA. Then I do not understand the remark as to the possible capriciousness of the people in rejecting one part or the other. I understood the gentleman to adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Salem, (Mr. Lord). We put to the people this ninth proposition to say "yes," or "no" to. If they say "yes," they are accepted, if "no," they are rejected. Well, then, we propose to say here, in Convention, by force of resolves, that if the people reject that proposition, that rejection shall thereby transfer the thirtieth article of the old Bill of Rights, into our new Constitution. I ask the gentleman whether he apprehends that we have any right, by force of resolution merely, to transfer an article from the Bill of Rights of 1780, to the Constitution of 1853? You say to the people, will you accept or reject proposition "ten?" They answer, "no." Can we say, then, by resolution here, that their negative shall operate to transfer article thirtieth of the Bill of Rights from the Constitution of 1780, to the Constitution of 1853? I put it to those gentlemen as a legal question, whether it can be done?

Mr. LORD, of Salem. I suppose it is not quite unimportant in what sort of form this matter goes out. In my judgment, the people are quite as anxious to have it put into a proper shape, as they are for us to go home; and they are anxious for the last, we all know. Now, Sir, the suggestion which I make in reply to the question put by the gentleman who represents Manchester, is this: He asks if we have the power to say, if the people reject propositions nine, ten, eleven, and twelve, that the twenty-ninth article of the Bill of Rights of the old Constitution shall be called, and shall form the thirtieth article in the new Constitution? Well, Sir, I think the form is pretty unimportant; what I am after, is substance. Numbers nine, ten, eleven, and twelve, are amendments to an article of the Bill of Rights of the old Constitution. The twenty-ninth article of the old Constitution says, for certain reasons, which it recites, that judges shall hold their offices during good behavior. The amendment says, that for these very same reasons, they shall hold their offices according to the tenure of the Constitution. Now we say, it is competent for us to submit to the people the question "will you amend that article?" If you adopt it, you amend that article; if you do not, it stands; and the mere fact that we designate the article in which it shall stand, is an unimportant matter. The whole question which we submit to the people, being, will you amend it; if you do amend it, then it stands amended; if you do not amend it, then the article which we propose to amend, shall still remain a part of the Constitution, unamended, and unaltered. I can see no difficulty in this matter. I think it would be proper to say, that if number "one" is adopted, then the present Constitution is abrogated, but if it is not adopted, then the present Constitution shall stand. I think that is proper, and I think it is just as proper to say if the twenty-ninth article of the Bill of Rights is amended, it shall stand amended, but if the people reject it, then the twenty-ninth article shall stand unamended, and unaltered. I see no difficulty whatever, and I hope gentlemen who are anxious to have this question submitted to the people as an independent one, will overlook the nice technicalities in form, where there is no objection to the substance.

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham. As I am desirous to satisfy every gentleman as to the mode of submitting these provisions to the people, I ask them to look at the different systems upon which the old Constitution and the proposed Constitution have been formed. Now, I said on a former occasion, that it is easy for any gentleman to sit down and take these amendments, and by classifying them under as many chapters as there are in the old Constitution, and putting in every matter into the chapter to which it belongs, form the chapters in place of the old ones. Now you can do that, but in order to carry out that mode, you must sacrifice a great deal of system. Just look at the effect. In the old Constitution are six chapters and thirteen amendments. There are sections in each chapter, and those sections are divided and subdivided into articles. If you follow the old system you will have a jumbled up Constitution, one exceedingly difficult to be cited, for every-body knows that in citing the Constitution to the court, they are frequently involved in extreme difficulty to make themselves understood by the court as to their citation. Now here is an improvement. Every gentleman who has ever looked to an analysis will see that it is an improvement, by taking this new Constitution and making fourteen chapters of it, and subdividing each chapter into articles, and embracing in each chapter the whole subject matter of that chapter. It is a scientific classification, according to all rules, to comprise subjects into chapters and articles. If you desire to have that, you must have the great body of the Constitution presented together. Now I confess that when I began to make these amendments, I was desirous to put them in that form, chapter for chapter, and yet, as I said before, it can be done only at the expense of symmetry. At the same time, however, I yield, though not without doubt of difficulty, to the suggestion of the attorney-general, (Mr. Choate,) so far as to place the subject of the judiciary before the people as a separate question, because it is a distinct subject, though not entirely satisfied as to the manner in which it is brought forward, or that the adoption of it in that particular form will not involve us in difficulties.

These are the reasons why I shall vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Choate,) while at the same time my convictions are, that we should take as much of this Constitution as a whole as we practically can.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. Choate, to strike out the different portions of number "one" as hereinbefore stated, and to insert them among the separate propositions to be submitted to the people as distinct questions, and it was decided in the negative—ayes, 72; noes, 168.

So the motion was lost.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. In consequence of a change of the resolution by the Committee immediately before the last edition of the Report went to the press, an omission has been made which leaves a matter in doubt which ought to be rendered certain. I therefore move to insert after the word "officers" in the following clause of the second article of this chapter, "and all judicial officers may be removed by the governor, with consent of the council, upon the address of both houses of the legislature," the words "for whose appointments different provision is not made in this Constitution, shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the council, and they".

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION. — LORD — BOUTWELL — WATERS — HATHAWAY — HUBBARD.

[August 1st.

Mr. LORD, of Salem. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee whether he understands that these limited justices, those who have power to do certain things, but not to try causes, are judicial officers who are to be removed?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do.

Mr. LORD. Then I submit that this amendment of the Constitution which the Convention has not voted upon, that the provision of the Constitution in relation to the removal of officers upon the address of the two houses, applies in its terms only to those officers who are appointed during good behavior, while another mode is prescribed by the Constitution for getting rid of justices. Now this article makes justices removable by the governor and council, when they were not removable by the governor and council upon the address to the two houses, under the former Constitution. That is an amendment which is not in the Constitution, and I submit that in order to make this amendment conform to the present action of the Convention, it is necessary to insert after the words "judicial officers" the words "except justices," so that it shall read, "and all judicial officers except justices may be removed by the governor, with consent of the council, upon the address of both houses of the legislature." The clause as it now stands, changes the Constitution without the action of the Convention.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The point suggested by the gentleman from Salem, was considered in Committee, if I understand it; and it arose from this fact, that the first article of the third chapter of the existing Constitution leaves the question as to the power of the governor and council in some doubt in this regard. That article reads thus:—

"The tenure that all commission officers shall, by law, have in their offices, shall be expressed in their respective commissions. All judicial officers, duly appointed, commissioned and sworn, shall hold their offices during good behavior, excepting such concerning whom there is different provision made in this Constitution: provided, nevertheless, the Governor, with consent of the Council, may remove them upon the address of both houses of the legislature."

The difficulty about this provision is, that it is a matter of some doubt whether it includes justices of the peace, or excludes them. If it includes them, then they may be removed by the governor as well as other judicial officers. The Committee intended to declare that they might be removed, because they thought such was the design of the Convention. It is, however, for the Convention to say whether justices of the peace shall be removable or not.

Mr. LORD, of Salem. The question before the Convention now is: "Did the old Constitution provide for the removal of justices of the peace?" In the old Constitution we find in the paragraph which the gentleman from Berlin has just quoted, that "All judicial officers duly appointed, commissioned and sworn, shall hold their offices during good behavior, excepting such concerning whom there is different provision made in this Constitution: provided, nevertheless, the Governor with consent of the Council, may remove them upon the address of both houses of the legislature."

Remove whom? Those officers whose term of office continued during good behavior.

Now here are justices of the peace who are not otherwise provided for; and then the section goes on to say that all commissions shall expire and become void in seven years. I contend that, taking these two articles together, it was not competent for the governor and council to remove them upon the address of both houses of the legislature; and the reason was, that their tenure was limited. This matter was once before a committee of the legislature with a case before them in which they were all of opinion that there should be a removal, but the legislature laid the report upon the table, and took no action upon it.

Now it seems to me that, taking these provisions together, justices of the peace were not designed to be removed. I therefore move to amend the article by inserting, after the words "judicial officers," the words "except justices of the peace." That clause will then read, "and all judicial officers except justices of the peace, may be removed by the governor, with consent of the council, upon the address of both houses of the legislature."

Mr. WATERS, of Millbury. I hope that this stumbling-block which has always been in the old Constitution, will not be retained. There have been three constructions given to this article referred to by the gentleman from Salem, by men of extreme legal ability; and whenever you have attempted to remove a justice of the peace, this obscurity has been brought up and the respondent has escaped. When the Constitution of 1820 was adopted, Judge Story referred to the difficulty in the third article, and with that provision it has been impossible to remove justices of the peace under the old Constitution. Cases of gross malfeasance have been proved, and yet, in consequence of the obscurity of this article, it is impossible to remove a justice of the peace. Why, Sir, I would sooner undertake to draw a woodchuck from his burrow, ten feet under ground, with a corkscrew, [laughter,] than attempt to remove a justice of the peace under the existing Constitution, no matter how corrupt he may be. It cannot be done, Sir.

Now, it seems to me, that the Committee having that matter under consideration, have removed that obscurity; and I regard it as one of the most important improvements made in this Constitution. I therefore hope that the article will be retained, as they have reported it. To attempt to remove a justice of the peace involves a great expense; you cannot try a justice of the peace short of two thousand dollars; and I trust, therefore, that this evil may be remedied, and I think the article as it stands does furnish that remedy.

Mr. HATHAWAY, of Freetown. I have my doubts as to whether a justice of the peace is a judicial officer. The court of a justice of the peace never was a court of record. Now, what are justices of the peace, under the Constitution, as we propose to make them? Their authority is exceedingly limited. Instead of making them officers capable of holding courts of record, we make them merely ministerial officers. Trial justices may, perhaps, be regarded as a different class, holding courts of record; but if justices of the peace are forever prohibited from issuing warrants, how can it be that those persons are judiciary officers who cannot try any cases, civil or criminal? It seems to me—unless there is a great mistake somewhere—that it is wholly unnecessary to make the exception of justices of the peace.

Mr. LORD, of Salem. In order to save labor and the time of the Convention, I would suggest that instead of the words "justices of the peace," the words "justices of police courts," should be used.

Mr. HATHAWAY. There is no doubt about their being judicial officers.

Mr. LORD. I offer this amendment because the Convention has already determined another mode for removing them, and there was no such mode for removing them in the old Constitution, any way. If the Convention inserts these words, it will leave the old Constitution, in that respect, as it is.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Boston. If I understand the question, the gentleman for Berlin proposes that justices of the peace may be removable by the governor and council, on address, as in other cases?

Mr. LORD. In order to avoid farther dispute and trouble in regard to this matter, I will withdraw the amendment.

The eighth chapter was then finally passed.

The Secretary then proceeded to read the ninth chapter, relating to the qualifications of voters, and elections—designating the persons entitled to vote; the mode of voting; ballots to be in sealed envelopes; the day of elections; by whom meetings to be called; the officers who are to be elected by a majority of votes; provisions in case of no election by the people; provisions in regard to the election of city and town officers; officers who may be elected by a plurality vote; and provisions in cases of failure to elect. It is as follows:—

ARTICLE 1. Every male citizen, twenty-one years of age and upwards, (excepting paupers and persons under guardianship,) who shall have resided within the Commonwealth one year, and within the town or district, in which he may claim a right to vote, six calendar months next preceding any election of any national officer, or any officer required by this Constitution to be elected by the people, shall have a right to vote in such election; and no other person shall have such right.

[ART. 2. All ballots required by law to be given at any national, state, county, district, or city election, including elections for representatives and trial justices, justices and clerks of police courts, shall be deposited in sealed envelopes of uniform size and appearance, to be furnished by the Commonwealth.]

ART. 3. Lists of the names of qualified voters shall be used at all elections required by this Constitution. They shall be made out and used in such manner as shall be by law provided. The presiding officers at such elections shall receive the votes of all persons whose names are borne on such lists, and shall not be held answerable for refusing the votes of any persons whose names are not borne thereon.

ART. 4. All meetings for the choice of national, state, county, or district officers, including representatives, trial justices, clerks and justices of police courts, by the people, shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, annually; and they shall be called by the mayor and aldermen of the cities, and the selectmen of the towns, and warned in due course of law. The manner of calling and holding public meetings in cities, for the election of officers under this Constitution, and the manner of returning the votes given at such meetings, shall be as now prescribed, or as shall hereafter be prescribed by the Legislature.

Monday,] REVISED CONSTITUTION.—PARKER—BOUTWELL—WATERS—HALLETT—HUBBARD—BUTLER. [August 1st.

ART. 5. A majority of all the votes given shall be necessary to the election of governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary, treasurer, auditor, and attorney-general, of the Commonwealth, until otherwise provided by law, but no such law providing that such officers, or either of them, or representatives to the General Court, shall be elected by plurality, instead of a majority of votes given, shall take effect until one year after its passage; and if at any time after any such law shall have taken effect, it shall be repealed, such repeal shall not become a law until one year after the passage of the repealing act; and in the absence of any such law, if at any election of either of the above-named officers, except the representatives to the General Court, no person shall have a majority of the votes given, the House of Representatives shall elect two out of three persons then eligible, who had the highest number of votes, if so many shall have been voted for, and return the persons so elected to the Senate, from whom the Senate shall choose one who shall be the officer thus to be elected.

ART. 6. A majority of votes shall be required in all elections of representatives to the General Court, until otherwise provided by law.

ART. 7. In the election of all city or town officers, such rule of election shall govern as the Legislature may by law prescribe.

ART. 8. In all elections of councillors and senators, and in all elections of county or district officers, the person having the highest number of votes shall be elected.

ART. 9. Whenever, in any election where the person having the highest number of votes may be elected, there is a failure of election because two persons have an equal number of votes, subsequent trials may be had at such times as may be prescribed by the Legislature.]

Mr. PARKER, of Cambridge. The Report of the Committee appointed to revise and put the amendments into form, was distributed this morning, and it is very evident that sufficient time has not been given for an examination of that Report, so that we can compare it with the resolutions which were committed to the Committee, and with the present Constitution. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the work of this Convention cannot be finished to-night in a proper manner. For the purpose of having an opportunity to make that examination, I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question being taken, on a division, there were—ayes, 51; noes, 133—so the Convention refused to adjourn.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. In order to make it conform to the resolution referred to the Committee, which includes state as well as national officers, I move that the word "state" be inserted after the word "any," so that it will read:—

Every male citizen, of twenty-one years of age and upwards, (excepting paupers and persons under guardianship,) who shall have resided within the Commonwealth one year, and within the town or district, in which he may claim a right to vote, six calendar months next preceding any election of any national officer, or any state officer required by this Constitution to be elected by the people, shall have a right to vote in such election; and no other person shall have such right.

The question being taken upon the amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. WATERS, of Millbury. It seems to me that there is a little obscurity as to the manner of electing trial justices. If they are county officers, they are to be elected by a plurality vote, while if they are town officers, they are to be elected by a majority vote. I think this obscurity ought to be remedied, as it may lead to a practical difficulty; and I would suggest to the chairman, whether it should not be remedied now, by deciding whether these officers should be elected by a plurality vote or a majority vote. I move to add the words "including trial justices" after the word "officers," in the eighth article, so that it will read as follows:—

ART. 8. In all elections of councillors and senators, and in all elections of county or district officers, including trial justices, the person having the highest number of votes shall be elected.

The PRESIDENT. That is an amendment of substance, and not of form.

Mr. WATERS. I believe the Convention have decided that trial justices are county officers.

The PRESIDENT. As it is an amendment of substance, it is not, therefore, admissible.

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham. I wish to move a reconsideration of the vote which has just been taken, by which the word "state" was inserted between "any" and "officer." I understand that the construction with regard to national and state officers, out of which this provision grew, was somewhat doubtful. If the word "state" is put in there, so that it will read "the election of any national officer or any state officer," you declare in your Constitution, that when a man has no right to vote for national or state officers, therefore he has no right to vote for county and district officers. I cannot think that the Convention intend to put any such construction as that upon it. I move to reconsider that vote, for the purpose of either striking out the word "state" or adding "or other," which will amount to the same thing. I do not know how you can give a voter any more power than the Constitution gives him.

Mr. LORD, of Salem. I understand that that amendment was made for the purpose of putting the Constitution into the form in which we have already voted that we want it; and, it seems to me, that if we now change that, it is a change of substance, and not a change of form.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair admitted the amendment, on the ground that it was to re-establish the original construction.

Mr. HALLETT. Is the motion to reconsider, out of order?

The PRESIDENT. The amendment was admitted in order that the article might stand in accordance with the terms of the resolution which the Convention acted upon.

Mr. HALLETT. That is the question. I say it stands as the Convention passed upon the subject, without the word "state," and the introduction of that word changes the meaning.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will entertain the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Boston. I am very confident that the article, as placed in the Constitution, conforms to the resolve which was passed by the Convention. The amendment that was made with regard to the qualification of voters, had reference to article number nine of the Constitution, which prescribes the qualifications of electors of governor, lieutenant-governor, senators and representatives, and an attempt was made to extend it to all classes of elections, when the ground was taken that the Constitution provided for those classes of officers, but the legislature, by statute, provided for the qualification of electors at town meetings, and that it should be left to them to act upon those elections hereafter. I am certain that it corresponds to the resolve, as it was adopted by the Convention.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. I cannot have any doubt in my own mind, that the introduction of the word "state" there, is meant to designate them as contradistinguished from national officers. When I say state officers, I mean officers who act under the authority of the State; and when I say national officers, I mean those officers who act under the authority of the general government. The two terms are merely used in contradistinction to each other. I think that the legislature, or the judges of the supreme court, whenever they are called upon to construe it, would consider it to apply to electors in all elections. I am not in favor, therefore, of the motion to reconsider. I doubt the propriety of the construction of the gentleman for Wilbraham. The provision is, that any man "shall have a right to vote in such election;" that is all. What election is that? Of course it must be State elections; and what can you elect at State elections? Every officer in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in my judgment, I am content with it, Sir, as it is. I am not very strongly in favor of having a tax qualification for voting for anything under Heaven; and I insist that no man shall have such qualification, but what is put in in conformity with the resolve as it was passed. I have no doubt as to the construction of that resolution, and I hope the motion to reconsider will not prevail.

Mr. HALLETT. The assurances of gentlemen, that they have no doubt about the construction, does not relieve my difficulty; I wish to place it beyond the possibility of doubt, and to make it certain. The proposition which was adopted by the Convention was, the proposition that no tax qualification should be required to qualify any person to vote for state or national officers. It struck out, consequently, that provision contained in the ninth article of the old Constitution, which declared that every male citizen, of twenty-one years of age and upwards, —excepting paupers and persons under guardianship—who shall have resided within the Commonwealth one year, &c., and who shall have paid a tax, &c., in the town in which he shall claim the right to vote, shall have a right to vote for governor, lieutenant-governor, senators and representatives. Now, you say that persons without paying taxes, if they have the residence, shall have the right to vote for any national or any state officer; and, thereby, you say that they shall not vote for town representatives, because town representatives are not state officers; and I do not wish to go before the supreme court of this Commonwealth, upon the construction whether a representative of a town is a state officer, or an officer of the town. The only position upon which you stand here, in maintaining town representation, is, that the representative is an officer of the town, and not an officer of the state. If he comes here, and helps to make laws which govern the whole State, he is not an officer of the

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION. — HALLETT — ASPINWALL — MILLER — OLIVER — BUTLER.

[August 1st.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts, but he is an officer acting for the town that elects him—he is a deputy of that town. With that construction, no person has a right to vote for a town representative unless he pays a tax. For this reason, I want the word “state” stricken out, and I should like to have the word “other” inserted, so that it will read “any national officer, or any other officer required by this Constitution,” &c.

The PRESIDENT. It is not competent to strike out the word “state,” inasmuch as that word was in the original resolution; the gentleman may make any proposition to change the form which does not change the substance.

Mr. HALLETT. If that cannot be done, I should like to add the words “or other” between “state” and “offices,” so that it will read, “any national officer, or any state or other officer,” &c.

The PRESIDENT. That is an amendment of substance.

Mr. HALLETT. I think not, Sir. Then I ask general consent to put the proposition in this form; it certainly can do no injury, and it may prevent much confusion hereafter.

The PRESIDENT. If no objection is made, the gentleman can make the modification.

Mr. ASPINWALL, of Brookline. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. MILLER, of Wareham. I wish to state a difficulty which I have in my own mind. In the ninth article you provide for subsequent trials where there is a failure of election, because two persons have an equal number of votes; but in the choice of senators and councillors the return is to be made seventeen days before the first Wednesday in January. Now, if it should so happen that any two candidates for the office of senator in any district voted for have an equal number of votes there would be no chance that another election could be had before the meeting of the legislature, and certain districts might thereby be deprived of their senators. I make no motion; but merely name this for the consideration of the Convention.

No farther amendment being proposed, the Secretary proceeded to read chapter ten, as follows:—

ARTICLE 1. The following oath shall be taken and subscribed by every person chosen or appointed to any office, civil or military, under the government of the Commonwealth, before he shall enter upon the duties of his office, to wit:—

“I, A. B., do solemnly swear that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and will support the Constitution thereof; and that I will faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties incumbent on me as [here insert the office], according to the best of my abilities and understanding, agreeably to the Constitution and laws of the Commonwealth. So help me God.”

[Provided, that when any person, chosen or appointed as aforesaid, shall be conscientiously scrupulous of taking and subscribing an oath, and shall for that reason decline taking the above oath, he shall make and subscribe his affirmation in the foregoing form, omitting the word “swear,” and substituting the word “affirm;” and omitting the words “So help me God,” and subjoining instead thereof the words “And this I do under the pains and penalties of perjury.”]

And the said oaths or affirmations shall be taken and subscribed, by the governor and lieutenant-governor before the president of the Senate, in presence of the two Houses in convention; and by councillors before the president of the Senate and in presence of the Senate; and by the senators and representatives before the governor and council for the time being; and by the residue of the officers aforesaid before such persons, and in such manner, as shall from time to time be prescribed by law.

ART. 2. No governor, lieutenant-governor, or judge of the Supreme Judicial Court or Court of Common Pleas, shall hold any other office under the authority of this Commonwealth, except such as by this Constitution they are admitted to hold, saving that the judges of the said courts may hold the offices of justices of the peace through the State; nor shall they hold any other office, or receive any pension or salary from any other State, or government, or power whatever, except that they may be appointed to take depositions, or acknowledgments of deeds, or other legal instruments, by the authority of other States or countries.

[No person shall hold or exercise at the same time more than one of the following offices, to wit: the office of governor, lieutenant-governor, senator, representative, judge of the Supreme Judicial Court, or Court of Common Pleas, secretary of the Commonwealth, attorney-general, treasurer, auditor, councillor, judge of probate, register of probate, register of deeds, sheriff or his deputy, clerk of the Supreme Judicial Court, or Court of Common Pleas, clerk of the Senate or House of Representatives; and any person holding either of the above offices shall be deemed to have vacated the same by accepting a seat in the congress of the United States, or any office under the authority of the United States, the office of postmaster excepted. And no person shall be capable of holding at the same time more than two offices, which are held by appointment of the governor, or governor and Council, or the Senate, or the House of Representatives, military offices, and the offices of justices of the peace, justices of the peace and quorum, notaries public, and commissioners to qualify civil officers, excepted.]

ART. 3. And no person shall ever be admitted to hold a seat in the legislature, or any office of trust or importance under the government of this Commonwealth, who shall, in the due course of law, have been convicted of bribery or corruption, in obtaining an election or appointment.

* ART. 4. All commissions shall be in the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, signed by the governor, and attested by the secretary or his deputy, and have the great seal of the Commonwealth affixed thereto.

ART. 5. All writs, issuing out of the clerk's office in any of the courts of law, shall be in the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; they shall be under the seal of the court from whence they issue, and be signed by the clerk of such court.

ART. 6. All the laws, which have heretofore been adopted, used, and approved in the Province, Colony, State or Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and usually practised on in the courts of law, shall still remain and be in full force, until altered or repealed by the legislature; such parts only excepted as are repugnant to the rights and liberties contained in this Constitution.

No amendment being offered to chapter ten, the Secretary then read chapter eleven, as follows:—

ARTICLE 1. The governor shall be the commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the Commonwealth, and of the Militia thereof, excepting when these forces shall be actually in the service of the United States; and shall have power to call out any part of the military force to aid in the execution of the laws, to suppress insurrection, and to repel invasion.

[ART. 2. All citizens of this Commonwealth liable to military service, except such as may by law be exempted, shall be enrolled in the militia, and held to perform such military duty as by law may be required.]

ART. 3. The militia may be divided into convenient divisions, brigades, regiments, squadrons, battalions, and companies; and officers with appropriate rank and titles may be elected to command the same. And the discipline of the militia shall be made to conform, as nearly as practicable, to the discipline of the army of the United States.

ART. 4. The governor shall appoint an adjutant-general, a quartermaster-general, and such other general staff-officers as shall be designated by law; who shall be commissioned by him for the term of one year, and until their successors shall be commissioned and qualified. And the adjutant-general and quartermaster-general shall have salaries fixed by law, which shall be in full for all services rendered by them in their several offices.

ART. 5. The major-generals shall be elected by the votes of the brigadier-generals and field-officers of the brigades, regiments, squadrons, and battalions of the respective divisions.

ART. 6. The brigadier-generals shall be elected by the votes of the field-officers of the regiments, squadrons, and battalions, and captains of companies, of the respective brigades.

ART. 7. The field-officers of regiments, squadrons, and battalions, shall be elected by the votes of the captains and subalterns of companies of the respective regiments, squadrons, and battalions.

ART. 8. The captains and subalterns shall be elected by the members of the respective companies.

ART. 9. All elections of military officers shall be by a majority of the written votes of those present and voting, and no person, within the description of a voter as hereinbefore specified, shall be disqualified by reason of his being a minor.

ART. 10. The Legislature shall prescribe the time and manner of convening the electors hereinbefore named, of conducting the elections, and of certifying to the governor the names of the officers elected.

ART. 11. The several officers elected shall be forthwith commissioned by the governor for the term of three years from the dates of their respective commissions, and until their successors shall be commissioned and qualified.

ART. 12. If the electors of the several officers before named shall refuse or neglect to make an election, for the space of three months after legal notice of a meeting for that purpose, the governor shall appoint and commission for three years a suitable person to fill the vacant office, with the advice of the Council if the vacancy be that of a major-general, or with the advice of the major-general of the division in which the appointment is to be made, if the vacancy be of an inferior grade.

ART. 13. Major-generals, brigadier-generals, and commanders of regiments, squadrons, and battalions, shall severally appoint such staff-officers as shall be designated by law in their respective commands.

ART. 14. All non-commissioned officers, whether of staff or company, and all musicians, shall be appointed in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

ART. 15. All officers of the militia may be removed from office by sentence of court-martial, or by such other modes as may be prescribed by law.]

Mr. OLIVER, of Lawrence. This chapter being one of those things which are put into the omnibus to sweeten it, according to the idea of my friend from Salem, (Mr. Lord,) and as I am very desirous to vote for it just as it is, I move to take it out from number “one,” and put it among the propositions which are proposed to be sent out to the people separately, as number “nine.”

The PRESIDENT. It is not competent at this stage to move to strike out the whole chapter.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. As in my judgment, it is best that we never shall adjourn this

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—BOUTWELL—HILLARD—CHAPIN.

[August 1st.

Convention but once, and then without day, and in order that we may finish our work without feeling that we have not had supper, I move that we take a recess for one hour, until eight o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and the Convention accordingly took a recess until eight o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at eight o'clock.

No amendment being proposed to chapter eleven, chapter twelve—in regard to the University of Cambridge, the school fund, and the encouragement of literature—was read, and finally passed without amendment, as follows:—

ARTICLE 1. Whereas our wise and pious ancestors, so early as the year one thousand six hundred and thirty-six, laid the foundation of Harvard College, in which university many persons of great eminence have, by the blessing of God, been initiated into those arts and sciences which qualified them for public employments, both in church and state; and whereas the encouragement of arts and sciences, and all good literature, tends to the honor of God, the advantage of the Christian religion, and the great benefit of this, and the other United States of America—it is declared, that the PRESIDENT AND FELLOWS OF HARVARD COLLEGE, in their corporate capacity, and their successors in that capacity, their officers and servants, shall have, hold, use, exercise and enjoy, all the powers, authorities, rights, liberties, privileges, immunities and franchises, which they now have, or are entitled to have, hold, use, exercise and enjoy; and the same are hereby ratified and confirmed unto them, the said President and Fellows of Harvard College, and to their successors, and to their officers and servants, respectively, forever. But the Legislature shall always have full power and authority, as may be judged needful for the advancement of learning, to grant any farther powers to the President and Fellows of Harvard College, or to alter, limit, annul, or restrain, any of the powers now vested in them: provided, the obligation of contracts shall not be impaired; and shall have the like power and authority over all corporate franchises hereafter granted, for the purposes of education, in this Commonwealth.

ART. 2. And whereas there have been, at sundry times, by divers persons, gifts, grants, devises of houses, lands, tenements, goods, chattels, legacies and conveyances, heretofore made, either to Harvard College in Cambridge, in New England, or to the President and Fellows of Harvard College, or to the said College by some other description, under several charters successively; it is declared, that all the said gifts, grants, devises, legacies and conveyances, are hereby forever confirmed unto the President and Fellows of Harvard College, and to their successors, in the capacity aforesaid, according to the true intent and meaning of the donor or donors, grantor or grantors, deviser or devisors.

ART. 3. And whereas by an Act of the General Court of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, passed in the year one thousand six hundred and forty-two, the governor and deputy-governor, for the time being, and all the magistrates of that jurisdiction, were, with the president, and a number of the clergy in the said Act described, constituted the overseers of Harvard College; and it being necessary, in this new constitution of government, to ascertain who shall be deemed successors to the said governor, deputy-governor, and magistrates; it is declared that the governor, lieutenant-governor, Council and Senate of this Commonwealth are, and shall be deemed, their successors; who, with the president of Harvard College, for the time being, together with the ministers of the congregational churches in the towns of Cambridge, Watertown, Charlestown, Boston, Roxbury, and Dorchester, mentioned in the said Act, shall be, and hereby are, vested with all the powers and authority belonging, or in any way appertaining, to the overseers of Harvard College: provided, that nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the Legislature of this Commonwealth from making such alterations in the government of the said University, as shall be conducive to its advantage, and the interest of the republic of letters, in as full a manner as might have been done by the Legislature of the late Province of the Massachusetts Bay.

[ART. 4. It shall be the duty of the Legislature, as soon as may be, to provide for the enlargement of the School Fund of the Commonwealth, until it shall amount to a sum not less than two millions of dollars; and the said fund shall be preserved inviolate, and the income thereof shall be annually appropriated for the aid and improvement of the common schools of the State, and for no other purpose.]

ART. 5. Wisdom and knowledge, as well as virtue, diffused generally among the body of the people, being necessary for the preservation of their rights and liberties; and as these depend on spreading the opportunities and advantages of education in the various parts of the country, and among the different orders of the people, it shall be the duty of Legislatures and magistrates, in all future periods of this Commonwealth, to cherish the interests of literature and the sciences, and all seminaries of them; especially the University at Cambridge, public schools, and grammar schools in the towns; to encourage private societies, and public institutions, rewards and immunities, for the promotion of agriculture, arts, sciences, commerce, trades, manufactures, and a natural history of the country; to countenance and inculcate the principles of humanity and general benevolence, public and private charity, industry and frugality, honesty and punctuality in their dealings; sincerity, good humor, and all social affections, and generous sentiments among the people.

Chapter thirteen, containing miscellaneous provisions, was next read by the Secretary, as follows:—

ARTICLE 1. A census of the inhabitants of each city and town in the Commonwealth, on the first day of May in the year 1855, and on the first day of May of each tenth year thereafter, shall be taken and returned into the secretary's office, on or before the last day of the June following the said first day of May in each of said years; and while the public charges of government, or any part thereof, shall be assessed on polls and estates, in the manner that has hitherto been practised, in order that such assessments may be made with equality, there shall be a valuation of estates within the Commonwealth taken anew once in every ten years at least, and as much oftener as the General Court shall order.

[ART. 2. Persons holding office by election or appointment, when this Constitution takes effect, shall continue to discharge the duties thereof until their term of office shall expire, or officers authorized to perform their duties, or any part thereof, shall be elected and qualified, pursuant to the provisions of this Constitution; when all powers not reserved to them by the provisions of this Constitution shall cease: provided, however, that justices of the peace, justices of the peace and of the quorum, and commissioners of insolvency, shall be authorized to finish and complete all proceedings pending before them at the time, when their powers and duties shall cease, or be altered as aforesaid. All laws in force when this Constitution goes into effect, not inconsistent therewith, shall continue in force until amended or repealed.

ART. 3. The Legislature shall provide, from time to time, the mode in which commissions or certificates of election shall be issued to all officers elected pursuant to the Constitution, except in cases where provision is made therein.

ART. 4. The governor, by and with the consent of the Council, may at any time, for incapacity, misconduct or maladministration in their offices, remove from office, clerks of courts, commissioners of insolvency, judges and registers of probate, district-attorneys, registers of deeds, county treasurers, county commissioners, sheriffs, trial justices, and justices of police courts: provided, that the cause of their removal be entered upon the records of the Council, and a copy thereof be furnished to the party to be removed, and a reasonable opportunity be given him for defence. And the governor may at any time, if the public exigency demand it, either before or after such entry and notice, suspend any of said officers, and appoint substitutes, who shall hold office until the final action upon the question of removal.

ART. 5. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in any elective office, provided for in this Constitution, except that of governor, lieutenant-governor, councillor, senator, member of the House of Representatives, and town and city officers, the governor for the time being, by and with the advice and consent of the Council, may appoint some suitable person to fill such vacancy, until the next annual election, when the same shall be filled by a new election, in the manner to be provided by law: provided, however, trial justices shall not be deemed to be town officers for this purpose.

ART. 6. All elections provided to be had under this amended Constitution shall, unless otherwise provided, be first held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four.

ART. 7. This Constitution shall go into operation on the first Monday in February, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four.

ART. 8. The terms of all elective officers, not otherwise provided for in this Constitution, shall commence on the first Wednesday in January next after their election.]

ART. 9. In order to remove all doubt of the meaning of the word "inhabitant," in this Constitution, every person shall be considered as an inhabitant, for the purpose of electing and being elected into any office or place within this State, in that town, district, or plantation, where he dwelleth, or hath his home.

ART. 10. This form of government shall be enrolled on parchment, and deposited in the secretary's office, and be a part of the laws of the land; and printed copies thereof shall be prefixed to the book containing the laws of this Commonwealth, in all future editions of the said laws.

MR. BOUTWELL, for Berlin, moved to amend the first article in the third line, by striking out the figures 1855, and substituting therefor the words "one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. HILLARD, of Boston, moved a verbal amendment to the fifth article in the last clause, by inserting the word "that" after the word "however," so as to make the clause read:—

Provided, however, That trial justices shall not be deemed to be town officers for this purpose.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. BOUTWELL moved to strike out the word "amended" in the second line of the sixth article as being surplusage, the article as it stood reading:—

All elections provided to be had under this amended Constitution, &c.

The motion to strike out the word "amended," was agreed to.

MR. CHAPIN, of Worcester, moved to amend the fourth article in the seventh line by inserting after the word "justices" the words "and clerks," so as to make it read:—

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION. — HATHAWAY — CHAPIN — MASON — MORTON.

[August 1st.

ART. 4. The Governor, by and with the consent of the Council, may at any time, for incapacity, misconduct or maladministration in their offices, remove from office, clerks of courts, commissioners of insolvency, judges and registers of probate, district-attorneys, registers of deeds, county treasurers, county commissioners, sheriffs, trial justices and justices and clerks of police courts, &c.

Mr. HATHAWAY thought the amendment unnecessary, as clerks of "police" courts were certainly "clerks of courts."

Mr. CHAPIN regarded the term "clerks of courts," as heretofore used, as applying to clerks of higher courts, and not to police courts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON, of Fitchburg, moved to amend the sixth article in the fourth line by inserting after the word "November" the words "in the year," so as to make the article read:—

ART. 6. All elections provided to be had under this Constitution shall, unless otherwise provided, be first held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four.

The amendment was agreed to; and

The thirteenth chapter was then finally passed.

The Secretary then proceeded to read the fourteenth and last chapter of the Revised Constitution, providing for future revisions and amendments of the Constitution of Massachusetts, as follows:—

[ARTICLE 1. A Convention to revise or amend this Constitution may be called and held in the following manner: At the general election in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, and in each twentieth year thereafter, the qualified voters in State elections shall give in their votes upon the question, "Shall there be a Convention to revise the Constitution?" which votes shall be received, counted, recorded, and declared, in the same manner as in the election of Governor; and a copy of the record thereof shall, within one month, be returned to the office of the Secretary of State, who shall, thereupon, examine the same, and shall officially publish the number of yeas and nays given upon said question, in each town and city, and if a majority of said votes shall be in the affirmative, it shall be deemed and taken to be the will of the people that a Convention shall meet accordingly; and, thereafter, on the first Monday of March ensuing, meetings shall be held, and delegates shall be chosen, in all the towns, cities, and districts, in the Commonwealth, in the manner and number then provided by law for the largest number of representatives which the towns, cities, and districts shall then be entitled to elect in any year of that decennial period. And such delegates shall meet in Convention at the State House, on the first Wednesday of May next ensuing, and when organized, shall have all the powers necessary to execute the purpose for which such Convention was called; and may establish the compensation of its officers and members, and the expense of its session, for which the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Council, shall draw his warrant on the treasury. And if such alterations and amendments, as shall be proposed by the Convention, shall be adopted by the people voting thereon in such manner as the Convention shall direct, the Constitution shall be deemed and taken to be altered or amended accordingly. And it shall be the duty of the proper officers, and persons in authority, to perform all acts necessary to carry into effect the foregoing provisions.

ART. 2. Whenever towns or cities containing not less than one-third of the qualified voters of the Commonwealth, shall at any meeting for the election of State officers, request that a Convention be called to revise the Constitution, it shall be the duty of the legislature, at its next session, to pass an Act for the calling of the same, and to submit the question to the qualified voters of the Commonwealth, whether a Convention shall be called accordingly: provided, that nothing herein contained shall impair the power of the Legislature to take action for calling a Convention, without such request, as heretofore practised in this Commonwealth.]

ART. 3. If, at any time hereafter, any specific and particular amendment or amendments to the Constitution be proposed in the General Court, and agreed to by a majority of the senators and two-thirds of the members of the House of Representatives, present and voting thereon, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered on the journals of the two Houses, with the yeas and nays taken thereon, and referred to the General Court then next to be chosen, and shall be published; and if, in the General Court next chosen, as aforesaid, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be agreed to by a majority of the senators and two-thirds of the members of the House of Representatives, present and voting thereon; then it shall be the duty of the General Court to submit such proposed amendment or amendments to the people; and if they shall be approved and ratified by a majority of the qualified voters, voting thereon, at meetings legally warned and holden for that purpose, they shall become part of the Constitution of this Commonwealth.

[ART. 4. The Legislature which shall be chosen at the general election on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five, shall divide the State into forty single districts for the choice of senators, such districts to be of contiguous territory, and as nearly equal as may be in the number of qualified voters resident in each; and shall also divide the State into single or double districts, to be of contiguous territory, and as nearly equal as may be in the number of qualified voters resident in each, for the choice of not less than two hundred and forty, nor more than three hundred and twenty representatives; with proper provisions for districting the Commonwealth as aforesaid, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six, and every tenth year thereafter; and with all other provisions necessary for carrying such system of districts into operation; and shall submit the same to the people at the general election to be held in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-six, for their ratification; and if the same shall be ratified and adopted by the people, it shall become a part of this Constitution in place of the provisions contained in this Constitution for the apportionment of senators and representatives.]

Mr. MORTON, of Taunton. I should be glad, Mr. President, even at this late hour of our deliberations, to gain, if I could, the attention of the Convention for a few moments. I certainly shall occupy but very little time, because there are reasons which will necessarily limit me.

Thus far, I have avoided intruding myself upon the Convention in regard to this important and most objectionable measure, except in offering a merely verbal amendment. I had the honor, Mr. President, to be a member of the Committee appointed to revise and prepare the amendments of the Constitution to be submitted to the people of the Commonwealth. It gives me great pleasure—though I take little credit to myself—to say that I think that that Committee deserves great credit for their ingenuity and industry in arranging these amendments. The Committee in their plan of submitting them to the people, have thought proper to form them into groups—some of them in very large masses, and others in small portions, or rather to form one group comprehending all the most important amendments, and nine-tenths of the whole, and to submit each of the minor ones separately. Some days ago I prepared a resolution, the object of which was to give this Committee instructions on this subject; but the pressure of other matters prevented me from offering it to the Convention, and the Committee assumed the authority to arrange the proposed amendments without any action of the Convention; and under these circumstances, I beg leave to offer a very few suggestions in relation to the scheme of the Committee, and to the manner in which I think these amendments should be presented to the people.

Sir, I think that it is our duty as a Convention, in executing the trust which has been confided to us, to prepare these amendments in such manner as to give the people the best possible opportunity of acting upon them freely and understandingly, and without any embarrassment or constraint. This can only be done by allowing them to vote separately upon many different points. I had supposed, until recently, that we were all agreed that the several distinct propositions should be submitted to the people singly; and it did not enter my mind that the mass of them were to be put together and acted upon by the people jointly, so as to deprive them of the opportunity of approving of some propositions and disapproving of others. The Committee, however, have seen fit to decide otherwise, and have formed the major part of these amendments into one large group, in regard to which I will say a few words. At this time it is not possible to enter into a full argument of a question involving so many important considerations; I think that it would have been more wise and safe to have followed the example which was set us more than thirty years ago, and to have submitted these several propositions to the people, who could have acted upon them separately, without restraint on the one hand or temptation on the other. It appears to me that we have adopted a course which trenches upon the rights of the people, in putting these propositions altogether, for by adopting this mode, we prevent the people from acting distinctly on each amendment. You say to them imperatively and authoritatively: "Take this whole group, and either reject the whole or accept the whole. We, in our wisdom, have devised a perfect scheme. We will not endanger its harmony by permitting you to reject any of its parts. We have one object in forming the whole scheme, which you are bound to believe is for your good. It must be adopted as we have devised it. You must not be allowed to mar the symmetry of the plan, or defeat its object by altering or rejecting any of its members."

Sir, it is altogether likely that many of the people, like myself, will find in this scheme some propositions which they would wish to adopt, and others which they would wish to reject. But no such liberty is here permitted to them; and I ask if this is not transcending our delegated authority, and exercising arbitrary and dictatorial power? What right have we to bind up the whole people in this way? Do we not forget that the people must make the Constitution, and that we are only instruments to prepare and lay before them such propositions as they may wish to express their pleasure upon? Do we not pervert the purpose of our appointment, when we undertake to devise plans to arrest from the people their inherent right to judge of the proposals which their agents have formed, by their directions? Do we not assume to act as masters, when we are only servants? It may be that some of the propositions are so connected and dependent on each other, that you cannot separate them. For instance, the amendments in relation to the Council and the Senate, are dependent, and therefore indivisible. You cannot separate them, because the Council Districts are based upon the Senatorial Districts, and should the senatorial basis be rejected, the provision for the Council would be impracticable. I think, therefore, the union of these two provisions unobjectionable. But, the amendment in regard to the House of Representatives, the most important and the most obnoxious one in the whole list, stands on entirely different ground. And no substantial reason can be assigned for connecting all sorts of propositions, except those of doubtful popularity.

Monday.]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—MORTON—EAMES.

[August 1st.

I am aware of the ingenious reasons which the members of the Committee have offered in regard to this point. Gentlemen so correct, and perhaps I might say, so fastidious in their tastes, so ambitious of elegance of composition, and so proud of harmony of diction, might well say they thought that, by grouping these questions together they could put them in more symmetrical form, and make them look more elegant on paper. But let me ask, gentlemen, which is of the most importance—the beauty of the phraseology, or the value of the principle? I will not discuss this matter farther; but I had supposed that we should have had the fullest and fairest scope of testing, at the polls, the estimation in which the people hold all these amendments; and that they might have said, separately, whether they were for senatorial districts, or against them; for the election of officers by the people, or their appointment by the legislature or executive; for the election of representatives by towns, or by equal districts; for the abolition of a poll tax, or against it; for the adoption of the secret ballot, or against it; and so on through the whole category, without having other matters connected with these questions. By presenting these questions altogether, you coerce the people on the one hand, or offer a bribe to them on the other. You say to them, in effect: "If you will take this bitter thing, you shall have also this sweet thing;" or it may operate upon them in the way of constraint, inasmuch as you say: "If you do not accept this which you dislike, you shall not have that which you do like." This, I contend, is an infringement of the rights of the people. It is equivalent to saying to a religious man: "You shall have a church, if you will take an assignation house along side of it, but you shall not have the one without the other;" or to an educational man: "You may have a school, provided you are content to have a gambling house next door to it." Now, Sir, if the people view this matter as I do, they will say, indignantly, No! let the church go; let the school go; if we cannot have what is righteous and just, without taking what is unrighteous and unjust, we spurn them both. We will not be compelled to take things which are so offensive to us, in order that we may obtain other things which we desire.

But I will hasten on with these suggestions, and come to some points which are more practical, and which will, perhaps, stand a little better chance of gaining attention.

I fear, Sir, that we have somewhat forgotten the mission upon which we were sent to this house; that we have been acting together in the exercise of unrestrained power, till we have forgotten the source of our authority, and have not sufficiently borne in mind the wishes and rights of those who stand behind us, to act upon the propositions which we may submit to them. I fear that, while we profess democracy, and a love for the people, we have acted on an opposite principle. Distrust of the people is stamped on almost every act. Look at what was said in regard to the State credit. It was avowed, by some of the majority—I do not remember whom—that the people could not be trusted with power in regard to this matter. And what was the result? They were divested of the power to decide where the credit of the State might be loaned or given away. What! Not trust the people with the management of their own money, and their own credit! And, Sir, it has been just so in regard to every other act. No principle, however sound and just, is fully carried out. So it was in regard to the secret ballot. We all wanted it in some elections, but a majority were not willing to apply it to all, and the people were not allowed to determine for themselves whether they would have it extended to any, or in what cases they would adopt it. Just so, likewise, was it in regard to the plurality question. You would not let the people decide the question, for or against it, as they might choose. And in regard to the subject of representation, the most important subject which was submitted to us, we have not only disregarded the well known wishes of the people for a reduction of the House, but refused to allow them to decide between the town and district system.

Sir, from the beginning, while we have continually heard professions of love for the people, and a desire to be governed by their wishes, our acts have shown a want of confidence in them, and a disregard of their wishes and interests. This has made itself manifest, not only in our acts and votes, but has occasionally peeped out of our speeches. Those from whom we have heard most of the sodality of mankind and the brotherhood of the whole human family, have now and then given us an inkling of their feelings by comparing large classes of our inhabitants "to the cattle in the farmer's field, and the birds that fly over them;" nay, to that cunning, thievish, carrion bird, the "crow." I would not quote the hasty expressions of an individual, especially a frank, sincere, and high-minded one, did they not, in my mind, indicate the feelings and sentiments of a class who, from their ability, their eloquence, and their other distinguished qualities, seem to have a controlling influence over the deliberations of this Convention.

Mr. EAMES, of Washington. I rise to a point of order. If the gentleman is going to move an amendment, I would like to have it read, that I may be looking it over.

Mr. MORTON. If the gentleman from Washington will try to repress his wishes for a few moments, he shall be gratified with the proposition; or, if he cannot restrain his curiosity, I will gratify him now.

Mr. EAMES. The fifteen minutes allowed the gentleman from Taunton will expire directly, and I would like to know what the amendment is, before the time expires.

Mr. MORTON. The gentleman will soon be gratified.

I wanted, Sir, to say a word in relation to the ground which several of the Committee have taken upon this subject. They have told us that their main desire, in putting the amendments together in this shape, was to preserve the symmetry and harmony of the instrument, and the beauty and orderly arrangement of the pamphlet to be published. I am afraid that gentlemen deceive themselves as to the real cause which has induced them to adopt this course. I am bound to believe the gentlemen are sincere in their professions, and honestly believe that they are governed by the causes which they assign. But if they will look at the matter a little more disinterestedly, they will perceive how very difficult it will be to make outsiders believe it, and to prevent them from judging that, in order to carry some favorite but objectionable scheme, all the popular measures have been connected with it, to induce the people to vote for it, and thus to give it the force of a popular adoption, when it may be that a majority of them are opposed to it. They may possibly adopt the language of one of the Committee, on another occasion, and say: "The lion's skin is not big enough—not half big enough, to conceal that other animal, which I will not name. His ears are in full view."

Now, Sir, for my amendment. I move that the fourth article of the chapter now under consideration, be transferred to the amendments which are to be passed upon separately; that it stand and go out to the people as a separate proposition.

The fourth article is as follows:—

ART. 4. The legislature which shall be chosen at the general election on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five, shall divide the State into forty single districts for the choice of Senators, such districts to be of contiguous territory, and as nearly equal as may be in the number of qualified voters resident in each; and shall also divide the State in single or double districts, to be of contiguous territory, and as nearly equal as may be in the number of qualified voters resident in each, for the choice of not less than two hundred and forty, nor more than three hundred and twenty representatives; with proper provisions for districting the Commonwealth as aforesaid, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six, and every tenth year thereafter; and with all other provisions necessary for carrying such system of districts into operation; and shall submit the same to the people at the general election to be held in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-six, for their ratification; and if the same shall be ratified and adopted by the people, it shall become a part of this Constitution in place of the provisions contained in this Constitution for the apportionment of Senators and Representatives.

I suppose that gentlemen understand what I mean. But I was about to say that I do not question the motives of the Committee, but this motion, it seems to me, will test their sincerity. Unless other reasons than those assigned influence their minds, they cannot hesitate to vote for this motion, for it comes perfectly within all the reasons given and all the rules laid down for the classification which they have made. In the first place, this is entirely new matter—a new proposition standing entirely by itself, having no precedents in the old Constitution.

In the next place, it is entirely unconnected in any way with any other part of the old Constitution, or the amendments; and if you were to strike it all out, every other portion would be perfect without it, just as it is if adopted; it in no way interferes with the rest of the instrument either with or without amendments. It does not in any degree stand in the way of the adoption or rejection of any or all the other amendments. If the whole are adopted, this is perfectly consistent with them all. If any parts are adopted, this still stands perfectly consistent with them, be they whichever they may. So if all be rejected, this stands in perfect consistency with the old Constitution. I therefore can see no reason why it should be retained in its position in this chapter, rather than stand by itself. It proposes a new method of amending or altering our Constitution; and if it is adopted, then, whatever legislature may be in power, might go on and execute the provision. There can, therefore, be no possible reason why this should be retained in its present place; unless it be to have an influence upon other measures which gentlemen wish to get adopted without the approbation of the people. I will not impute any such motives to any member of the Convention.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—MORTON—WILLIAMS—WILSON—STETSON—BUTLER.

[August 1st.

It is well known that if the Constitution which you now propose should be adopted, it will introduce a different basis of representation, and will place the power to elect a majority of the House of Representatives into the hands of about one-third of the people. Now, I will inquire whether any gentleman wishes to prevent the adoption of this provision until this gross inequality be introduced into the House of Representatives? Are they afraid to trust anybody with the administration of this but the one-third House of Representatives? I would not do any one—certainly not one of the Committee—the injustice to suppose that they had any desire so unrighteous.

One word more in relation to the necessity of the adoption of this provision. We never can have an amendment of the House of Representatives without it. When the one-third get the power they never will surrender it. The amendments provide that under them no constitutional amendments can be proposed unless they are adopted in two successive years, by a vote of two-thirds of the House. It may, therefore, be safely assumed that you never will have an amendment of the House of Representatives made in this way; for one-sixth of the people of the State, and those the most interested portion, could always prevent any such amendment. One-third of the House of Representatives could prevent the amendment from passing, and that third might be chosen by only one-sixth part of the whole people of the Commonwealth. Under these circumstances, I will ask, do you desire to confine the execution of this provision to the action of so very small a number, especially when it is considered that it is upon the very subject of their own power, which men everywhere are so very reluctant to yield?

But I see, by the President's exceedingly kind intimation, that my time has expired, and so I will take my seat. There were a few words more that I would have been glad to have added, had time permitted.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Taunton, asked for the yeas and nays on the motion of Mr. Morton; and the question being put, the result was—ayes, 37; noes, 189.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WILSON obtained the consent of the Convention to correct two verbal mistakes in the article under consideration.

Mr. STETSON, of Braintree. I trust, Mr. President, that the Convention will separate this fourth article from chapter fourteen, and put it in among the miscellaneous amendments. I suppose—I did suppose, and I have supposed—that the people were to have the right to decide upon such amendments as might be made by us, so far as it could be done, by having the opportunity to vote upon them in a separate and distinct form. I did not expect that the doctors who have had the preparation of these amendments were to put them into the form of a bolus dose. I am generally willing to take such doses as the doctors prescribe, but if they give too large a dose, it sometimes makes a person sick, and he throws it all up; and it may be that the people will serve this Constitution in the same way. [Laughter.] But, for my own part, I prefer to take medicine in a homœopathic way, and I think we should do better to administer this new Constitution to the people in homœopathic doses. But if it is the pleasure of the Convention to send all these numerous alterations and changes and amendments out to the people, to be adopted or rejected together, and if the people sanction it and submit to it, I have nothing to say. Out of so many new provisions, however, I think we can well separate this, and put it as a separate proposition, as suggested by the gentleman from Taunton. I should like to have all these propositions acted upon by the people separately, so that every man could vote for what he liked and vote against every thing else; but I presume the Convention will decide otherwise, and the people will be obliged to take it as we give it to them. I trust that, upon sober reflection, however, the Convention will agree to the amendment of the gentleman from Taunton, and put this fourth article into the supplement.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. I should be sorry to take up the time of the Convention at this late hour, but there are two or three things that have lately been said upon this amendment, that I cannot allow to pass, so far as I am concerned, without a word of reply. I had supposed, that after the very learned, able and experienced gentleman from Taunton had proposed the district system, in various ways—after he had called for it four times and had had the yeas and nays called upon it three several times, in various stages, that he would hardly have wished, at this hour of the night, to trouble us with it again. I have no doubt but that what he has done has been done in perfect good faith—I am bound to suppose that—but I will state what seems to be the result to which he has arrived. He professes to be a friend to the district system; he is anxious to have the district system adopted in this Commonwealth; but he has found that the district system is unpalatable to a very large majority of this Convention—I may say, to almost if not quite a hundred majority—and now, if he really wants the district system, when he finds it is so unpalatable, why does he object to let us put it in here and sweeten it with some other propositions before it goes out to the people? Why does he object to our sweetening it and sending it out to the people, telling them that they must take the bitter with the sweet? That is a very fair comparison, I admit; for in every position in which we find ourselves in this world, we are bound to take the good and bad together.

Mr. MORTON. The gentleman entirely misunderstood me; and if he will allow me, I will state what I said. I stated, or meant to state, to the Convention, that the proposition, although it was not very palatable to me, yet it might be so to a good many people, and the putting it in there might induce some people to vote for the House of Representatives. While I am up, I wish to correct another statement of the gentleman, about calling for the yeas and nays. I believe I have not called for them this session.

Mr. BUTLER. I can say the same thing again. Qui facit per alium, facit per se. Perhaps the gentleman will not deny that he asked his colleague to call for them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will answer for myself, that I was not asked to call for them.

Mr. BUTLER. I spoke to one gentleman from Taunton, and not the other.

Mr. MORTON. I will answer then, that I did not say a word to that gentleman about it.

Mr. BUTLER. It was all accidental, then. The gentleman from Taunton went over there by accident, and his colleague called for the yeas and nays by accident! I am bound to believe it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to know if the gentleman intends to impute prevarication to me.

Mr. BUTLER. Not the least in the world; what are you so anxious for? "Let the galled jade wince—my withers are unwrung!" What is the trouble? I will only say again that the yeas and nays upon these various propositions have been called for three several times. The gentleman from Taunton says we take the bitter with the sweet. I call it bitter, but perhaps it may be like the little book in the angel's hand, sweet in the mouth and bitter in the belly. I call this bitter, and I say, put the sweet with it. I ask the gentleman in all soberness,—I respect his grey hairs, for I am bound to respect them,—what part of this Constitution he feels it his duty to compare to an assignation house? He compares the district system to a church; but where is the assignation house? He compares some provisions to a school; but where is the gambling house in this Constitution? I submit, with great deference to the gentleman, for I am bound to defer to his experience; I am bound to defer to his taste; but I simply ask him whether it is either good taste or good logic, and I hope he will excuse me if I add, good manners, thus to characterize that which has met the approval of this Convention. I do not think he meant it; I think it was a slip of the tongue. If it had come from a young person of hot blood, after dinner, I should have known that it was a slip of the tongue; but I scarcely expected such a remark from an elderly gentleman of the character of the gentleman from Taunton. I will call attention to one other statement of that gentleman. He says that we never can get our Constitution amended, because it requires two-thirds of the House of Representatives. Why, Sir, this proposition requires, first, that the legislature should submit the district system. They cannot help it. They are bound, constitutionally, by a majority vote, to do it. They will be obliged to submit it in 1856.

Mr. MORTON, (interposing). I spoke of the ordinary provisions of the Constitution; I had no reference to this at all, except so far as the provision goes that it shall require two-thirds. I am surprised that the gentleman should have got that idea from anything that I said.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION. — BUTLER — HILLARD — BOUTWELL.

[August 1st.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the state of the case to be this, they must vote in 1855 by a majority of the House of Representatives, and of the Senate—

Mr. MORTON, (in his seat). If you adopt this, I admit it.

Mr. BUTLER. If this is adopted. Now, Sir, he wants a district system, and we have put this in here where every gentleman who has spoken to-day thinks is the best chance of having it adopted, by putting the whole together. Now I ask what objection there can be to it. I will tell what I think will be the effect of his proposition, although of course I know he does not mean it. We all know that a district system must come, sooner or later. Every-body believes that the State has got to be districted for choosing representatives, either before or after this is adopted by the people, and I do not see any difference which it is. Now the friends of the Convention come forward and say to the people: "We are ready to give you a district system if you want it." I do not think they do; but if they do they shall have a chance at it. Why are not gentlemen ready to take it? I will tell you what, in my judgment, is thought to be the effect of it. I think some gentlemen—I do not refer to anybody in particular, and so I shall not run under your hammer, Mr. President—some gentlemen are afraid to have it go out as a well-framed, well-put-together proposition; they are afraid to have it, and why? Because then we can say to the people, not that we give them churches and assignment houses, and they must take both, or neither; we say to them: If you want a district system, and believe that you are ready for it, vote for your Constitution and you will get it; but if you do not, if you prefer the system which was sustained by this Convention by more than a hundred majority, you are at liberty to retain it and there is no harm done.

Now what is there wrong in that? Is anybody wronged, anybody troubled, anybody harmed. Every-body agrees that if you put out the proposition alone it does not stand quite so good a chance. Gentlemen who want the district system, why not march up and take it. I believe that if this is put into the Constitution it goes by forty thousand majority at least, in the Commonwealth. It spikes the guns of certain persons, and that is the trouble. Now they want to get this out alone. I believe, in their opposition to this proposition, that we have the last expiring trick of conservatism. The last. And as this proposition is voted down by the Convention, the last shot is fired, and we shall go out to the people as we have been here, in spite of now and then a man against us whom we expected to be for us, and who if he had not professed to be a friend of reform, would have had no more chance of getting here than he would of getting to Heaven, and that is putting it strong enough. [Laughter.]

Gentlemen will find that we are not of those who do not dare to trust the people. We say we trust you with anything, but we propose to send you a machine perfect in all its parts; not a hobbling machine, with this thing left out, and that thing left in, where they ought not to be; not such a thing as that, but a thing perfect in all its parts. That is the Constitution which we propose to send out to the people, and not such a concern as will enable some judge, a few years hence, to come forward and put it in a revised form, and claim a copy-right of it. I thank God that we are to have a Constitution which no judge, present or to come, can obtain a copy-right of, and which we cannot print until we get his permission. We have come up here to have a Constitution and get rid of a patent.

Mr. HILLARD, of Boston. The remarks of the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) have opened a pretty wide range of discussion and inquiry. It is far too late, and the Convention far too impatient to justify me in travelling far in any of those paths. But I beg leave to ask the attention of the Convention for a very few moments, to considerations suggested by what fell from his lips.

What is the work to which we have been addressing ourselves? and in what spirit should we have approached that work? We have been making a Constitution, the highest secular duty which can be devolved upon man under a free government. The relation of constitutional law to legislative enactments has been somewhat discussed in books,—it has been treated by writers upon political philosophy,—but the relation of constitutional law to the political parties into which the country has been divided, has, as yet, not attracted the attention of writers upon politics; and yet it is a most important and novel branch of political science, and one which, each day, is assuming a new importance.

What is a model Constitution, and what would be a model Convention for making a Constitution? It would be a Convention anterior to the formation of parties, in which every man might reasonably expect to find himself, at some future time in the minority, because the object of a Constitution is to protect the minority. Therefore the best Constitutions are those which have been framed at a time when no man could tell where the political changes of the future might place him. It is one of the many felicities of our own history that the great political parties of our country grew out of the Constitution of the United States, and that the Constitution of the United States did not grow out of the mere political parties of the country. It was a difficult task to make a Constitution in 1789, and I think it would be an impossible task to make one now. If we should succeed, it would not be so good an instrument as that which we now enjoy. The greater majority any political party has in a Convention, the more magnanimous they can afford to be to the minority. But if party politics, if political parties—and I make this as a general remark with no particular application to this Convention, for I would not utter a word of recrimination or reproach, not a word to jar upon the harmony of feeling with which we should break up—if political parties, instead of finding their vent in our primary assemblies, and in our legislatures, come to fight their battles in a Constitutional Convention, I have only to say that it is an element of peril in our institutions, never contemplated by their founders, and never considered by writers upon political science, because you see that the result will be that the more powerful a majority is, and the more that majority are actuated by party feelings, the more they depart from the true functions of a Constitutional Convention, which is to make a Constitution which shall protect the minority. If, on the other hand, they come together with the assured purpose of oppressing the minority, and of strengthening the power which they hold in their own hands, so that the sceptre which they hold shall be transmitted in a lineal line of succession, I say they steer by a false star, and never can land upon a safe shore. I would be no prophet of evil, but here we are making arrangements for a Constitutional Convention every twenty years. In every State of the Union the Constitutions are renewed about once in a generation, and so far as experience has gone, each Convention that has been gathered together has had more of partisan feeling than its predecessor, and each succeeding Constitution has reflected more of the party spirit of the majority, and has more and more departed from its proper function, which is to protect the minority; and as a general rule, wherever there has been a change, the earlier Constitutions have been the best. Now I will make no charge. Let every man judge and speak for himself, but I put it to gentlemen who have had the responsibility of this Convention, and I ask them,—not here and now, in the glow and heat of our struggles and contentions, but when they go home and commune with their own hearts,—I ask them to question themselves if they have approached this high work in the high spirit in which they should have done, or whether the first impulse, the first motive and the first principle which has guided them, has not been one which, to say the least, ought to have been the last.

Now, on what ground was this Convention opposed, and voted against by those who did oppose and vote against it? For one, so far as I can judge from my own feelings, and from those with whom I am in the habit of acting, it was because it was a Convention which was wrung out of a party struggle, and that of necessity it must be a party Convention. And I ask gentlemen in the majority, in no unkind feeling, if there was not reason in those fears and apprehensions? I put it to some of the gentlemen who have been in the habit of acting in the majority, whether our apprehensions were wholly unreasonable? I would ask, if from the beginning to the end there has not been too much of this party element in our deliberations, and if the provisions of this Constitution, and especially the last and closing act of this eventful drama, have not been too much tinged by the ignoble desire of securing in the hands which now away the destinies of the Commonwealth, those destinies? I would ask gentlemen if they have elevated their minds to the proper point of view from which to contemplate their duties and responsibilities? if they have been actuated by the single wish to provide that which was best for the people, best for the Commonwealth, best for the generation which is to come, and to put it forward to the people in such a manner as shall secure their deliberate action upon it, or whether they have been actuated by that other class of motives which I will no longer dwell upon. I put it to them, and let them find the answer in the silence of their own hearts.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. I have no desire to dwell long upon some topics which have been introduced by the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) and by the gentleman from Boston (Mr. Hillard). This Convention, under an Act of the legislature, sustained by the people,

Monday.]

REVISED CONSTITUTION. — BOUTWELL — WILKINSON — DANA.

[August 1st.]

assembled to revise the Constitution of this Commonwealth. I understand the gentleman from Taunton, and the gentleman from Boston, to protest against the conclusion of the business for which this assembly have convened, and coupled with that protest, they proceed, if not to impugn the motives of the gentlemen upon the other side, at least to approach to the very nearest point of imputation. Not for the purpose of thus arraigning each other have we assembled, and for my part, I desire not that the last moments of this Convention should be embittered by considerations of such a nature. I trust, Sir, unless I have deceived myself, I have read lectures to no man upon this floor. I came not here for that purpose, but to do my duty as a delegate of the people, acknowledging no responsibility to any associates here, but for the obligations which social life and the courtesies of our natures demand. To the people alone, are we responsible. That responsibility, I for one, take; its consequences I shall never shun. The majority of this Convention, as was their duty, have taken the responsibility; and if they go before the people and cannot defend their proceedings, they fall. If they can defend their proceedings here, whatever gentlemen upon this floor may say, their conduct will be sustained, and their proceedings will stand.

I desire, Sir, that instead of arraigning each other, we proceed to the conscientious discharge of the duties before us, that he who desires not to take the responsibilities of these last moments of this Convention, upon that record, shall escape the responsibility; but let him, in justice to his fellows, allow them to take the responsibility if they choose to do it. For one, I take what belongs to me.

It was for the purpose of expressing the opinions which I have, that I arose at this time. For one, I desire to enter into no criminations or recriminations. I have no doubt that errors have been committed by the majority. We do not claim to have been perfect here. Errors may have been committed by the minority, and it may be that the shield of public charity is as necessary for them as for us.

The question was then taken upon the motion offered by the gentleman from Taunton, (Mr. Morton,) and there were, on a division—ayes, 53; noes, 169.

So the motion did not prevail.

The question then recurring upon the final passage of the resolve numbered "one"—

Mr. WILKINSON, of Dedham, said: I suppose it may be proper now to offer an amendment, but which, in the present state of excitement in the House, I do not wish to take up the time of the Convention in discussing. It seems to me that the proposition should be distinctly passed upon by this Convention, whether the people shall have the right to pass upon these amendments separately. We have had a standing rule during the sitting of this Convention, by which any person might ask for a division of the question when susceptible of division, and we have voted upon these several propositions separately, and I am desirous to submit to the consideration of this Convention the propriety of allowing the people to do what we have done in this Convention. I would therefore move that the Report be recommitted to the Committee with instructions to report the several amendments agreed upon by this Convention, in such form, and with such reference to parts of the existing Constitution proposed to be altered or annulled, that each of said amendments may be separately submitted to the people for their adoption or rejection.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would state that the motion is applicable only to the resolve numbered "one;" but it can be applied to each proposition as it comes up. The propositions were susceptible of division, and under a rule of the Convention the Chair must state the questions separately.

Mr. DANA, for Manchester. Before that question is put, I move to amend the first resolve so as to make it conform, in that part which refers to chapter eight, to the language of that title as we have amended it.

The question was taken and the motion was agreed to, and the resolve was amended accordingly.

The question recurring upon the motion of Mr. Wilkinson—

Mr. WILKINSON called for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered, one-fifth of the persons voting having voted therefor, there being, on a division—ayes, 51; noes, 181.

The yeas and nays were then called upon the motion offered by Mr. Wilkinson, and there were—yeas, 73; nays, 170—as follows:—

YEAS.

Adams, Benjamin P.	Ladd, John S.
Aldrich, P. Emory	Lawton, Job G., Jr.
Aspinwall, William	Lincoln, Fred. W., Jr.
Barrows, Joseph	Livermore, Isaac
Beach, Erasmus D.	Lothrop, Samuel K.
Beebe, James M.	Marvin, Theophilus R.
Bigelow, Jacob	Miller, Seth, Jr.
Bradbury, Ebenezer	Morey, George
Brewster, Osmyn	Morton, Marcus
Bullock, Rufus	Oliver, Henry K.
Carter, Timothy W.	Orcutt, Nathan
Choate, Rufus	Paige, James W.
Cogswell, Nathaniel	Parker, Adolphus G.
Cole, Lansing J.	Parker, Samuel D.
Cook, Charles E.	Perkins, Daniel A.
Crockett, George W.	Plunkett, William C.
Crosby, Leander	Pomroy, Jeramian
Davis, Solomon	Preston, Jonathan
Dennison, Hiram S.	Read, James
Ely, Homer	Reed, Sampson
Eustis, William T.	Sargent, John
Farwell, A. G.	Sherman, Charles
Gilbert, Wanton C.	Sleeper, John S.
Giles, Joel	Souther, John
Hale, Nathan	Stetson, Caleb
Hammond, A. B.	Stevens, Charles G.
Hathaway, Elnathan P.	Thompson, Charles
Hawkes, Stephen E.	Tileston, Edmund P.
Hayward, George	Weeks, Cyrus
Hillard, George S.	Wetmore, Thomas
Hinsdale, William	White, Benjamin
Houghton, Samuel	Wilder, Joel
Hunt, William	Wilkinson, Ezra
Jenkins, John	Williams, Henry
Jenks, Samuel H.	Wilson, Milo
Kellogg, Giles C.	Wood, Nathaniel
Knight, Joseph

NAYS.

Adams, Shubael P.	Bancroft, Alpheus
Allen, James B.	Barrett, Marcus
Allen, Joel C.	Bates, Moses, Jr.
Alley, John B.	Beal, John
Allis, Josiah	Bird, Francis W.
Alvord, D. W.	Bishop, Henry W.
Baker, Hillel	Booth, William S.
Ball, George S.	Boutwell, George S.

Boutwell, Sewell	Kendall, Isaac
Breed, Hiram N.	Knight, Hiram
Bronson, Asa	Knowlton, J. S. C.
Brown, Adolphus F.	Knowlton, William H.
Brown, Hammond	Knox, Albert
Brown, Hiram C.	Ladd, Gardner P.
Brownell, Frederick	Langdon, Wilber C.
Brownell, Joseph	Leland, Alden
Bryant, Patrick	Little, Otis
Buck, Asahel	Marble, William P.
Bullen, Amos H.	Mason, Charles
Burlingame, Anson	Merritt, Simeon
Butler, Benjamin F.	Monroe, James L.
Caruthers, William	Morton, Elbridge G.
Case, Isaac	Morton, Marcus, Jr.
Chandler, Amariah	Morton, William S.
Chapin, Chester W.	Nash, Hiram
Chapin, Daniel E.	Nayson, Jonathan
Chapin, Henry	Nute, Andrew T.
Childs, Josiah	Osgood, Charles
Clark, Salah	Packer, E. Wing
Clarke, Alpheus B.	Paine, Benjamin
Cole, Sumner	Paine, Henry
Crane, George B.	Parris, Jonathan
Crittenden, Simeon	Partridge, John
Cross, Joseph W.	Penniman, John
Cushman, Henry W.	Perkins, Noah C.
Cushman, Thomas	Phinney, Sylvanus B.
Dana, Richard H., Jr.	Pierce, Henry
Davis, Isaac	Pool, James M.
Davis, Robert T.	Powers, Peter
Dean, Silas	Putnam, John A.
Deming, Elijah S.	Rantoul, Robert
Denton, Augustus	Rawson, Silas
Dunham, Bradish	Rice, David
Durgin, John M.	Richards, Luther
Eames, Philip	Richardson, Daniel
Earle, John M.	Richardson, Nathan
Easland, Peter	Richardson, Samuel H.
Eaton, Calvin D.	Ring, Elkanah, Jr.
Edwards, Elisha	Rogers, John
Fay, Sullivan	Ross, David S.
Fellows, James K.	Royce, James C.
Fisk, Lyman	Sanderson, Amasa
Foster, Aaron	Sanderson, Chester
Foster, Abram	Schouler, William
Fowle, Samuel	Sherill, John
Freeman, James M.	Sikes, Chester
French, Charles A.	Simmons, Perez
French, Rodney	Simonds, John W.
French, Samuel	Smith, Matthew
Frothingham, R'd, Jr.	Sprague, Melzar
Gardner, Johnson	Spooner, Samuel W.
Gates, Elbridge	Stevens, Granville
Gilbert, Washington	Stiles, Gideon
Giles, Charles G.	Strong, Alfred L.
Gooding, Leonard	Taft, Arnold
Graves, John W.	Tilton, Abraham
Green, Jabez	Tyler, William
Greene, William B.	Underwood, Orison
Griswold, Josiah W.	Vinton, George A.
Griswold, Whiting	Wallace, Frederick T.
Hadley, Samuel P.	Wallis, Freeland
Hall, Charles B.	Walker, Amasa
Hallett, B. F.	Waters, Asa H.
Hapgood, Seth	Weston, Gershom B.
Harmon, Phineas	Whitney, Daniel S.
Haskins, William	Whitney, James S.
Heath, Ezra, 2d	Wilbur, Daniel
Hewes, William H.	Williams, J. B.
Hobart, Henry	Wilson, Henry
Hood, George	Wilson, Willard
Howard, Martin	Winn, Jonathan B.
Hoyt, Henry K.	Winslow, Levi M.
Hurlbut, Moses C.	Wood, Charles C.
Ide, Abijah M., Jr.	Wood, Ona
Jacobs, John	Wright, Ezekiel

ABSENT.

Abbott, Alfred A.	Austin, George
Abbott, Josiah G.	Ayres, Samuel
Allen, Charles	Ballard, Alvah
Allen, Parsons	Banks, Nathaniel P., Jr.
Andrews, Robert	Bartlett, Russel
Appleton, William	Bartlett, Sidney
Atwood, David C.	Bates, Eliakim A.

Monday.] REVISED CONSTITUTION.—OLIVER—SCHOULER—SARGENT—MASON—HALLETT—BOUTWELL. [August 1st.

Bell, Luther V.
Bennett, William, Jr.
Bennett, Zephaniah
Bigelow, Edward B.
Blagden, George W.
Bliss, Gad O.
Bliss, William C.
Bradford, William J. A.
Braman, Milton P.
Brinley, Francis
Briggs, George N.
Brown, Alpheus R.
Brown, Artemas
Bumpus, Cephas C.
Cady, Henry
Churchill, J. McKean
Clark, Henry
Clark, Ransom
Clarke, Stillman
Cleverly, William
Coggin, Jacob
Conkey, Ithamar
Coolidge, Henry F.
Copeland, Benjamin F.
Cressy, Oliver S.
Crowell, Seth
Crowninshield, F. B.
Cummings, Joseph
Curtis, Wilbur
Cutler, Simeon N.
Davis, Charles G.
Davis, Ebenezer
Davis, John
Dawes, Henry L.
Day, Gilman
Dehon, William
DeWitt, Alexander
Doane, James C.
Dorman, Moses
Duncan, Samuel
Easton, James, 2d
Eaton, Lilley
Edwards, Samuel
Ely, Joseph M.
Fiske, Emery
Fitch, Ezekiel W.
Fowler, Samuel P.
French, Charles H.
Gale, Luther
Gardner, Henry J.
Gooch, Daniel W.
Gould, Robert
Goulding, Dalton
Goulding, Jason
Gray, John C.
Greenleaf, Simon
Hale, Artemas
Hapgood, Lyman W.
Haskell, George
Hayden, Isaac
Hazewell, Charles C.
Heard, Charles
Henry, Samuel
Hersey, Henry
Hewes, James
Heywood, Levi
Hobart, Aaron
Hobbs, Edwin
Holder, Nathaniel
Hooper, Foster
Hopkinson, Thomas
Howland, Abraham H.
Hubbard, William J.
Hunt, Charles E.
Huntington, Asahel
Huntington, Charles P.
Huntington, George H.
Hurlburt, Samuel A.
Hyde, Benjamin D.
Jackson, Samuel
James, William

Johnson, John
Kellogg, Martin R.
Keyes, Edward L.
Kimball, Joseph
Kingman, Joseph
Kinsman, Henry W.
Knight, Jefferson
Knowlton, Charles L.
Kuhn, George H.
Lawrence, Luther
Lincoln, Abishai
Littlefield, Tristram
Loomis, E. Justin
Lord, Otis P.
Loud, Samuel P.
Lowell, John A.
Marcy, Laban
Marvin, Abijah P.
Meador, Reuben
Mixer, Samuel
Moore, James M.
Morris, Joseph B.
Newman, Charles
Nichols, William
Norton, Alfred
Noyes, Daniel
Ober, Joseph E.
Orne, Benjamin S.
Park, John G.
Parker, Joel
Parsons, Samuel C.
Parsons, Thomas A.
Payson, Thomas E.
Peabody, George
Peabody, Nathaniel
Pease, Jeremiah, Jr.
Perkins, Jesse
Perkins, Jonathan C.
PHELPS, Charles
Prince, F. O.
Putnam, George
Rockwell, Julius
Rockwood, Joseph M.
Sampson, George R.
Sheldon, Luther
Stacy, Eben H.
Stevens, Joseph L., Jr.
Stevens, William
Stevenson, J. Thomas
Storror, Charles S.
Stutson, William
Sumner, Charles
Sumner, Increase
Swain, Alanson
Taber, Isaac C.
Talbot, Thomas
Taylor, Ralph
Thayer, Joseph
Thayer, Willard, 2d
Thomas, John W.
Tilton, Horatio W.
Tower, Ephraim
Train, Charles R.
Turner, David
Turner, David P.
Tyler, John S.
Upham, Charles W.
Upton, George B.
Viles, Joel
Walcott, Samuel B.
Wales, Bradford L.
Walker, Samuel
Ward, Andrew H.
Warner, Marshal
Warner, Samuel, Jr.
Wheeler, William F.
White, George
Wilbur, Joseph
Wilkins, John H.
Wood, William H.
Woods, Josiah B.

Absent and not voting, 176.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER, of Lawrence. I do not suppose that any proposition which I could make, considering the condition which I occupy as one of the minority, will meet with any particular favor at the hands of the Convention, and yet I will venture to make one more motion. I have not any idea that any of the alkalies which have gone into the Constitution to neutralize the acids, will be removed; but I should like to take out that bantling of mine and let it ride alone; therefore I move that chapter eleven, in relation to the militia, be taken out from the omnium-gatherum, and made a separate proposition, number nine, so that it may be acted upon by the people separately.

Mr. SCHOULER, of Boston. I am sorry to see the gentleman from Lawrence making that motion at this late hour. I think that what is in the present Constitution in relation to the militia, is better than this bantling of the gentleman from Lawrence; and I said so when the matter was under discussion. But, inasmuch as it is in there, and inasmuch as the gentleman wants to get rid of it, I hope he will allow it to remain there. [Laughter.] Therefore, I am in favor of keeping it where it is. It is not so bad as I thought it was at first, and probably that is the reason that he wants to get it out.

Mr. SARGENT, of Cambridge. I hope the motion will succeed. I do not think much of this military law. It makes no provisions for Sergeants, and therefore, I hope it will be put by itself. [Laughter.]

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. Oliver, and it was decided in the negative.

Mr. MASON, of Fitchburg. I find that in the latter part of article first, chapter second, there is the word "be" before the word "chosen" which seems to be superfluous. The clause now reads as follows:—

Each district shall be entitled to elect one senator, who shall have been an inhabitant of this Commonwealth for five years immediately preceding his election, and at the time of his election shall be an inhabitant of the district for which he is to be chosen.

I move to strike out the word "be."

The question was taken and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I also move to insert the words "to be" before the word "entitled" in article two, chapter six, which is as follows:—

ART. 2. Eight councillors shall be annually chosen by the people; and for that purpose the State shall be divided by the General Court into eight districts, each district to consist of five contiguous senatorial districts, and entitled to elect one councillor, who shall hold his office for one year next following the first Wednesday in January, and until a successor is chosen and qualified in his stead.

Mr. HALLETT. In my judgment the amendment weakens rather than strengthens the language. It now declares that they are entitled, and the amendment says they are to be entitled. When? That language was well considered, is in conformity to the old Constitution, and is good Saxon English.

Mr. MASON. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The question recurs upon the final passage of proposition numbered "one."

Mr. BOUTWELL. This being the final disposition of that proposition, I ask the yeas and nays upon its passage.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The roll was then called and there were—yeas, 173; nays, 68—as follows:—

YEAS.

Allen, James B.
Allen, Joel C.
Alley, John B.
Allis, Josiah
Alvord, D. W.
Austin, George
Baker, Hillel
Ball, George S.
Bancroft, Alpheus
Barrett, Marcus
Bates, Moses, Jr.
Beach, Erasmus D.
Beal, John
Bird, Francis W.
Bishop, Henry W.
Booth, William S.
Boutwell, George S.
Boutwell, Sewell
Breed, Hiram N.
Bronson, Asa
Brown, Adolphus F.
Brown, Hammond
Brown, Hiram C.
Brownell, Frederick
Brownell, Joseph
Bryant, Patrick
Bullen, Amos H.
Burlingame, Anson
Butler, Benjamin F.
Carruthers, William
Case, Isaac
Chandler, Amariah
Chapin, Chester W.
Chapin, Daniel E.
Chapin, Henry
Childs, Josiah
Clark, Ransom
Clark, Salah
Clarke, Alpheus B.
Cole, Lansing J.
Cole, Sumner
Crane, George B.
Crittenden, Simeon
Cross, Joseph W.
Cushman, Henry W.
Dana, Richard H., Jr.
Davis, Isaac
Davis, Robert T.
Dean, Silas
Denton, Augustus
Dunham, Bradish
Durgin, John M.
Eames, Philip
Earle, John M.
Easland, Peter
Eaton, Calvin D.
Edwards, Elisha
Fay, Sullivan
Fellows, James K.
Fisk, Lyman
Foster, Aaron
Foster, Abram
Fowle, Samuel
Freeman, James M.
French, Charles A.
French, Rodney
French, Samuel
Frothingham, R., Jr.
Gardner, Johnson
Gates, Elbridge
Gilbert, Washington
Giles, Charles G.
Gooding, Leonard
Graves, John W.
Green, Jabez
Greene, William B.
Griswold, Josiah W.
Griswold, Whiting
Hadley, Samuel P.
Hall, Charles B.
Hallett, B. F.

Hapgood, Seth
Harmon, Phineas
Hathaway, Elnathan P.
Hawkes, Stephen E.
Hayden, Isaac
Heath, Ezra, 2d
Hewes, William H.
Hobart, Henry
Hood, George
Howland, Abraham H.
Hoyt, Henry K.
Hurlbut, Moses C.
Hyde, Benjamin D.
Ide, Abijah M., Jr.
Jacobs, John
Kendall, Isaac
Knight, Hiram
Knight, Joseph
Knowlton, J. S. C.
Knowlton, William H.
Knox, Albert
Ladd, Gardner P.
Langdon, Wilber C.
Lawton, Job G., Jr.
Leland, Alden
Little, Otis
Marble, William P.
Mason, Charles
Merritt, Simeon
Monroe, James L.
Morton, Elbridge G.
Morton, Marcus, Jr.
Morton, William S.
Nash, Hiram
Nayson, Jonathan
Nute, Andrew T.
Osgood, Charles
Packer, E. Wing
Paine, Benjamin
Paine, Henry
Parris, Jonathan
Partridge, John
Penniman, John
Perkins, Daniel A.
Perkins, Noah C.
Phinney, Silvanus B.
Pierce, Henry
Pool, James M.
Powers, Peter
Putnam, John A.
Rantoul, Robert
Rice, David
Richards, Luther
Richardson, Daniel
Richardson, Nathan
Richardson, Samuel H.
Ring, Elkanah, Jr.
Rogers, John
Ross, David S.
Royce, James C.
Sanderson, Amasa
Sherrill, John
Simmons, Perez
Simonds, John W.
Smith, Matthew
Spooner, Samuel W.
Stevens, Granville
Stiles, Gideon
Strong, Alfred L.
Taft, Arnold
Tilton, Abraham
Tyler, William
Underwood, Orison
Vinton, George A.
Wallace, Frederick, T.
Wallis, Freeland
Walker, Amasa
Waters, Asa H.
Weston, Gershom B.
White, George
Whitney, Daniel S.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—COLE.

[August 1st.

Whitney, James S.
Wilbur, Daniel
Williams, J. B.
Wilson, Henry
Wilson, Willard
Winn, Jonathan B.

Winslow, Levi M.
Wood, Charles C.
Wood, Nathaniel
Wood, Otis
Wright, Ezekiel

NAYS.

Adams, Benjamin P.
Aldrich, P. Emory
Apsinwall, William
Barrows, Joseph
Bartlett, Russel
Beebe, James M.
Bigelow, Jacob
Bradbury, Ebenezer
Brewster, Osymn
Carter, Timothy W.
Choate, Rufus
Crockett, George W.
Crosby, Leander
Davis, Solomon
Denison, Hiram S.
Ely, Homer
Farwell, A. G.
Gilbert, Wanton C.
Giles, Joel
Hale, Nathan
Hammond, A. B.
Hayward, George
Hillard, George S.
Hinsdale, William
Houghton, Samuel
Hunt, William
Hurlburt, Samuel A.
Jenkins, John
Jenks, Samuel H.

Kellogg, Giles C.
Ladd, John S.
Lincoln, Frederic W., Jr.
Livermore, Isaac
Lothrop, Samuel K.
Marvin, Theophilus R.
Miller, Seth, Jr.
Morey, George
Morton, Marcus
Oliver, Henry K.
Orcutt, Nathan
Paige, James W.
Parker, Adolphus G.
Plunkett, William C.
Preston, Jonathan
Read, James
Reed, Sampson
Sargent, John
Sikes, Chester
Sleeper, John S.
Souther, John
Stevens, Charles G.
Tileston, Edmund P.
Weeks, Cyrus
White, Benjamin
Wildner, Joel
Wilkinson, Ezra
Williams, Henry
Wilson, Milo

ABSENT.

Abbott, Alfred A.
Abbott, Josiah G.
Adams, Shubael P.
Allen, Charles
Allen, Parsons
Andrews, Robert
Appleton, William
Atwood, David C.
Ayres, Samuel
Ballard, Alvah
Banks, Nathaniel P., Jr.
Bartlett, Sidney
Bates, Eliakim A.
Bell, Luther V.
Bennett, William, Jr.
Bennett, Zephaniah
Bigelow, Edward B.
Blagden, George W.
Bliss, Gad O.
Bliss, William C.
Bradford, William J. A.
Braman, Milton P.
Brimley, Francis
Briggs, George N.
Brown, Alpheus R.
Brown, Artemas
Buck, Asahel
Bullock, Rufus
Bumpus, Cephas C.
Cady, Henry
Churchill, J. McKeon
Clark, Henry
Clarke, Stillman
Cleverly, William
Coggin, Jacob
Cogswell, Nathaniel
Conkey, Ithamar
Cook, Charles E.
Coolidge, Henry F.
Copeland, Benjamin F.
Cressy, Oliver S.
Crowell, Seth
Crowninshield, F. B.
Cummings, Joseph
Curtis, Wilber
Cushman, Thomas
Cutler, Simeon N.

Davis, Charles G.
Davis, Ebenezer
Davis, John
Dawes, Henry L.
Day, Gilman
Dehon, William
Deming, Elijah S.
DeWitt, Alexander
Doane, James C.
Dorman, Moses
Duncan, Samuel
Easton, James, 2d
Eaton, Lilley
Edwards, Samuel
Ely, Joseph M.
Eustis, William T.
Fiske, Emery
Fitch, Ezekiel W.
Fowler, Samuel P.
French, Charles H.
Gale, Luther
Gardner, Henry J.
Gooch, Daniel W.
Gould, Robert
Goulding, Dalton
Goulding, Jason
Gray, John C.
Greenleaf, Simon
Hale, Artemas
Hapgood, Lyman W.
Haskell, George
Haskins, William
Hazewell, C. C.
Heard, Charles
Henry, Samuel
Hersey, Henry
Hewes, James
Heywood, Levi
Hobart, Aaron
Hobbs, Edwin
Holder, Nathaniel
Hooper, Foster
Hopkinson, Thomas
Howard, Martin
Hubbard, William J.
Hunt, Charles E.
Huntington, Asahel

Huntington, Charles P.
Huntington, George H.
Jackson, Samuel
James, William
Johnson, John
Kellogg, Martin R.
Keyes, Edward L.
Kimball, Joseph
Kingman, Joseph
Kinsman, Henry W.
Knight, Jefferson
Knowlton, Charles L.
Kuhn, George H.
Lawrence, Luther
Lincoln, Abishai
Littlefield, Tristram
Loomis, E. Justin
Lord, Otis P.
Loud, Samuel P.
Lowell, John A.
Marcy, Laban
Marvin, Abijah P.
Meader, Reuben
Mixer, Samuel
Moore, James M.
Morss, Joseph B.
Newman, Charles
Nichols, William
Norton, Alfred
Noyes, Daniel
Ober, Joseph E.
Orne, Benjamin S.
Park, John G.
Parker, Joel
Parker, Samuel D.
Parsons, Samuel C.
Parsons, Thomas A.
Payson, Thomas E.
Peabody, George
Peabody, Nathaniel
Pease, Jeremiah, Jr.
Perkins, Jesse
Perkins, Jonathan C.
Phelps, Charles
Pomroy, Jeremiah
Prince, F. O.
Putnam, George

Rawson, Silas
Rockwell, Julius
Rockwood, Joseph M.
Sampson, George R.
Sanderson, Chester
Schouler, William
Sheldon, Luther
Sherman, Charles
Sprague, Melzar
Stacy, Eben H.
Stetson, Caleb
Stevens, Joseph L., Jr.
Stevens, William
Stevenson, J. Thomas
Storrow, Charles S.
Stutson, William
Summer, Increase
Surhner, Charles
Swain, Alanson
Taber, Isaac C.
Tabbot, Thomas
Taylor, Ralph
Thayer, Joseph
Thayer, Willard, 2d
Thomas, John W.
Thompson, Charles
Tilton, Horatio W.
Tower, Ephraim
Train, C. R.
Turner, David
Turner, David P.
Tyler, John S.
Upham, Charles W.
Upton, George B.
Viles, Joel
Walcott, Samuel B.
Wales, Bradford L.
Walker, Samuel
Ward, Andrew H.
Warner, Marshal
Warner, Samuel, Jr.
Wetmore, Thomas
Wheeler, William F.
Wilbur, Joseph
Wilkins, John H.
Wood, William H.
Woods, Josiah B.

Absent, and not voting, 188.

So proposition numbered "one" was passed.

Pending the call—

Mr. COLE, of Cheshire, asked the indulgence of the Convention to explain the reasons for the vote which he gave.

[Many voices. "No!" "No!" "No!"]

The PRESIDENT decided that leave could be granted only by unanimous consent.

The first proposition having thus been disposed of, the Secretary read the second proposition and the provision of the Constitution to which it referred, as follows:—

II. The provision respecting the granting of the writ of Habeas Corpus, as a proposition, numbered "two."

If this proposition be ratified and adopted, it shall be an addition to the provision respecting the Habeas Corpus.

The following is the provision referred to:—

The writ of habeas corpus shall be granted as of right in all cases in which a discretion is not especially conferred upon the court by the legislature; but the legislature may prescribe forms of proceeding preliminary to the obtaining of the writ.

The question was taken upon the final passage of the second proposition, and there were, upon a division—ayes, 169; noes, 17.

So the proposition was passed.

The third proposition was next read, as follows:—

III. The provision respecting the rights of juries in criminal trials, as a proposition, numbered "three."

If this proposition be ratified and adopted, it shall be an addition to the article in the Declaration of Rights, respecting the rights of persons charged with crimes.

The following is the provision referred to:—

In all trials for criminal offences, the jury, after having received the instruction of the court, shall have the right, in their verdict, of guilty or not guilty, to determine the law and the facts of the case, but it shall be the duty of the court to superintend the course of the trials, to decide upon the admission and rejection of evidence, and upon all questions of law raised during the trials, and upon all collateral and incidental proceedings; and also to allow bills of exceptions. And the court may grant a new trial in case of conviction.

The question being upon the passage of the third proposition it was put, and there were—ayes, 149; noes, 66.

So the proposition was passed.

The fourth proposition was then read, as follows:—

IV. The provision respecting claims against the Commonwealth, as a proposition, numbered "four."

If this proposition be ratified and adopted, it shall be an addition to Article XI., of the Declaration of Rights.

Proposition numbered "four," is as follows:—

Every person having a claim against the Commonwealth, ought to have a judicial remedy therefor.

The question was then taken upon the passage of the fourth proposition, and there were—ayes, 183; noes, 6.

So the proposition was passed.

The fifth proposition was then read, as follows:—

V. The provision respecting imprisonment for debt, as a proposition, numbered "five."

If this proposition be adopted, it shall be an addition to the Article in the Declaration of Rights, respecting excessive bail and fines.

The provision referred to, is as follows:—

"No person shall be imprisoned for any debt hereafter contracted, unless in cases of fraud.

The question was taken upon the passage of the fifth proposition, and there were—ayes, 163; noes, 16.

So the proposition was passed.

The sixth proposition was then read, as follows:—

VI. The provision respecting sectarian schools, as a proposition, numbered "six."

If this proposition be ratified and adopted, it shall be an addition to Article IV. of Chapter XII., entitled, "The University at Cambridge, The School Fund, and The Encouragement of Literature." If proposition numbered "one" shall not be adopted, it shall be added as an amendment to the Constitution.

The provision referred to, is as follows:—

All moneys raised by taxation in the towns and cities, for the support of public schools, and all moneys which may be appropriated by the State for the support of common schools, shall be applied to and expended in no other schools than

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—DANA—HALLETT—FROTHINGHAM—KNOWLTON—EARLE.

[August 1st.

those which are conducted according to law, under the order and superintendence of the authorities of the town or city in which the money is to be expended; and such moneys shall never be appropriated to any religious sect, for the maintenance, exclusively, of its own schools.

Mr. DANA. Before the question is taken upon the passage of the sixth proposition, I move to amend it by striking out the word "it" in the last clause, and inserting in lieu thereof, the words, "number six."

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALLETT. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the sixth proposition.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, one-fifth of those voting, not voting therefor.

The question was then taken upon the passage of the sixth proposition, and there were, upon a division—ayes, 159; noes, 24.

So the proposition was passed.

The PRESIDENT. The next proposition is in the following words:—

VII. The Legislature shall not create corporations by special act, when the object of the incorporation is attainable by general laws.

This proposition was adopted, without debate, on a division—ayes, 169; noes, 16.

The PRESIDENT. The next business before the Convention is the eighth proposition.

The Secretary read the following, previous to reading the proposition:—

VIII. The provision respecting Banks and Banking, as a proposition, numbered "eight."

If the propositions numbered "seven" and "eight" be ratified and confirmed, they shall be added as separate articles, or if either of them be ratified and confirmed, as an article in Chapter XIII., entitled "Miscellaneous Provisions."

If proposition numbered "one" be not ratified and confirmed, they shall be added as amendments to the Constitution."

The eighth proposition was then read, as follows:—

The Legislature shall have no power to pass any act granting any special charter for banking purposes, or any special act to increase the capital stock of any chartered bank; but corporations may be formed for such purposes, or the capital stock of chartered banks may be increased, under general laws.

The Legislature shall provide by law for the registry of all notes or bills authorized by general laws to be issued or put in circulation as money; and shall require ample security for the redemption of such notes, in specie.

The proposition was adopted, on a division—ayes, 153; noes, 36.

The question next recurred upon the second resolution, which was read, as follows:—

Resolved, That at the meetings for the election of Governor, Senators, and Representatives to the General Court, to be holden on the second Monday of November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, the qualified voters of the several towns and cities shall vote by ballot upon each of the propositions aforesaid, for or against the same, which ballots shall be inclosed within sealed envelopes, according to the provisions of an Act of this Commonwealth, passed on the twenty-second day of May, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-one, and an Act passed the twentieth day of May, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-two, and no ballots not so inclosed shall be received. And said votes shall be received, sorted, counted, declared, and recorded, in open meeting, in the same manner as is by law provided in reference to votes for governor, and a true copy of the record of said votes, attested by the selectmen and town clerk of each of the several towns, and the mayor and aldermen and city clerk of each of the several cities, shall be sealed up by said selectmen and mayor and aldermen, and directed to the Secretary of the Commonwealth, with a superscription expressing the purport of the contents thereof, and delivered to the sheriff of the county within fifteen days after said meetings, to be by him transmitted to the secretary's office, on or before the third Monday of December next; or, the said selectmen and mayor and aldermen shall themselves transmit the same to the secretary's office, on or before the day last aforesaid.

The resolve was agreed to.

The question next recurred upon the third resolution, which was read, as follows:—

Resolved, That the Secretary shall deliver said copies, so transmitted to him, to a Committee of this Convention, consisting of who shall assemble at the State House, on the third Monday of December next, and open the same, and examine and count the votes so returned; and if it shall appear that either of said propositions has been adopted by a majority of votes, then the proposition so adopted shall become and be either the whole or a portion of the Constitution of this Commonwealth, as hereinbefore provided, and the said Committee shall promulgate the results of said votes upon each of said propositions, by causing the same to be published in those newspapers in which the laws are now published; and shall also notify the Governor and Legislature, as soon as may be, of the said results; and the Governor shall forthwith make public proclamation of the fact of the adoption of either or all of said propositions, as the whole or as parts of the Constitution of this Commonwealth.

Mr. DANA moved to amend the resolution, by providing that the blank be filled with the name of the President of the Convention, and the names of twenty other persons, whom he should nominate.

"The amendment was agreed to, and the question recurring on the passage of the resolve, as amended,

The resolve was passed.

The question then recurred upon the fourth resolution, which was read, as follows:—

Resolved, That each of said propositions shall be considered as a whole by itself, to be adopted in the whole, or rejected in the whole. And every voter may vote on each proposition, by its appropriate number, without specifying in his ballot any reference to the subject of the proposition, and by writing opposite to the number of each proposition, the word Yes or No; but the vote on all of the propositions shall be written or printed on one ballot, in substance as follows:—

Constitutional Propositions.

Proposition No. I., . . .	Yes or No.
Proposition No. II., . . .	Yes or No.
Proposition No. III., . . .	Yes or No.
And to Proposition No. VIII.,	Yes or No.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM, of Charlestown. I have an amendment to propose to this resolve; and without questioning the eminent ability which has marked the course of the Committee in reference to preparing their Report and doing full justice to it, I yet think there may be an amendment here which will perhaps relieve the voters of considerable trouble at the polls. The proposition as it now stands, states that Every voter may vote on each proposition by its appropriate number, without specifying in his ballot any reference to the subject of the proposition, and by writing opposite to the number of each proposition the word Yes or No; but the vote on all of the propositions shall be written or printed on one ballot, in substance as follows:—

Constitutional Propositions.

Proposition No. I., . . .	Yes or No.
Proposition No. II., . . .	Yes or No.
Proposition No. III., . . .	Yes or No.
And to Proposition No. VIII.,	Yes or No.

Now, it seems to me that the ballot ought to specify each proposition. These pamphlets which we shall send out will, in all probability, be lost before the people come to the polls; and when they are there the inquiry will be: "What does number one mean? what does number two mean? or what does number three mean?" throughout the whole propositions. And then again the object is to prepare the ballot; and, after all, the ballot will not be specific. With these few remarks, I submit the following amendment, which is to strike out all after the word "whole," in the second line, and insert the following:—

Indicating on his ballot the subject of the proposition, and writing or printing the word Yes or No opposite to each proposition.

Mr. KNOWLTON, of Worcester. As a member of the Committee on Revision, I give the amendment of the gentleman from Charlestown my support. I think it is plainer than the proposition of the Committee, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. DANA, for Manchester. I was about to suggest, when I yielded the floor to the gentleman for Wilbraham, that it seems to me the proposition of the gentleman from Charlestown is a very proper one, and better than that which we had submitted; because, if the propositions were only designated by numbers, a mistake in those numbers, either from accident or design, would frustrate the intentions of the voters; but if we have both the number and the indication of the subject, there could be scarcely a possibility of mistake. The amendment was submitted by the gentleman from Charlestown to the chairman of the Committee, and to some other members, before he offered it, and I believe it met with general approbation. Perhaps it would be more grammatical to say "in" than to say "and." When a man votes, I do not suppose that any inquiry will be made as to whether he wrote his ballot, or whether his wife wrote it for him at home, or whether it was printed.

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham. It is just as easy to express it in language that every-body will understand, as it is to express it in doubtful language. If the word "in" will perfect the language, I move to substitute "in" instead of "and," so that it shall read: "indicating on his ballot the subject of the proposition in writing or printing, opposite each proposition."

Mr. EARLE, of Worcester. It appears to me, that it is very well as it is; and in answer to the objection which has been raised by the gentleman for Manchester and the gentleman for Wilbraham, I can say that I do not suppose there will be any difficulty about this matter. It is not presumed that the voters are going to the polls, and to sit down and write their ballots when they vote. Unquestionably these propositions will all be printed—one set with yeas and another set with nays opposite to each proposition; and then each voter could select that which corresponds the nearest to the way he wishes to vote, and alter it to suit himself. If he votes “yes” on the majority of the propositions, and there are two or three which he does not like, he can take his pencil and mark “no” opposite to them, erasing the word “yes.” I am in favor of the amendment as it now stands; I think there will be no difficulty arising from it.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION. — JENKS — HALLETT — STETSON — BUTLER — MARVIN — DANA.

[August 1st.

Mr. JENKS, of Boston. This seems to me to be merely a verbal dispute. It stands very well as the gentleman for Wilbraham proposes it, and it is much more plain and explicit. I presume the meaning is, that each voter shall state by a written or printed declaration; and perhaps that would be a good form in which to express it, instead of saying that he shall either write or print it.

Mr. HALLETT. I should be sorry to have this go out in a wrong form; and I will farther suggest that the word “stating” be substituted for “indicating,” so that it will read as follows:

And every voter shall vote on each proposition by its appropriate number, stating on his ballot the subject of the proposition, in writing or printing, and the word yes or no opposite to each proposition.

The question being then taken on the amendment to the amendment, it was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was then adopted.

The resolve, as amended, was then agreed to.

The question was then stated on agreeing to the fifth resolve:—

Resolved, That a printed copy of these resolutions, with the several constitutional propositions annexed, shall be attested by the Secretaries of the Convention, and transmitted by them, as soon as may be, to the selectmen of each town, and the mayor and aldermen of each city, in the Commonwealth, whose duty it shall be to insert a proper article in reference to the voting upon said propositions, in the warrant calling the meetings aforesaid, on the second Monday of November next.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to amend by inserting after the words “attested by,” the words “the President and,” so that it would read “shall be attested by the President and Secretaries of the Convention,” &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STETSON, of Braintree. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee, if it is intended that the same plan shall be pursued in the printing of the Constitution, which is pursued in the printing of these copies that have been distributed here. A part of this Constitution is set in open type, a part in close type, and a part in Italics. What I want is this: that in order that the people may understand what part of the Constitution is new and what part is old, it should be printed with all that is new inserted in Italics, and the old part in Roman. In that case, when it goes out to the people, they will not have to study and compare in order to find out what changes the Convention have made. I move that the Committee who have this matter in charge, direct all the new portion to be printed in Italics.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. I wish to inform the gentleman from Braintree, that the new parts are already differently printed from the old, so that they can be very well distinguished. However that may be, I had supposed that it was no part of the duty of the Committee on Revision to superintend the printing.

Mr. MARVIN, of Boston. I think some plan should be adopted to carry out the view of the gentleman from Braintree—either that which he has suggested, or, perhaps it may be well to have the new portions of the Constitution enclosed in brackets, as is frequently done in such cases. Every man who knows anything about printing, will agree with me in the opinion, that three-quarters of the men in the Commonwealth would not readily discern the difference between solid and leaded matter—I speak as a practical printer. I think there should be some obvious distinction to the eye between what is new and what is old.

Mr. EARLE. These suggestions may all be very well, but I think we had better leave this to be attended to by the Committee, and not take any action on it now.

Mr. BUTLER. I beg leave to make a single suggestion farther. I think those gentlemen who have been instructing us so long, how much the people are to be trusted, and throwing brickbats at us for not trusting them, are putting themselves to unnecessary trouble in inserting brackets and Italics in order that the people may know what this Convention have been doing. I have no fear but that the people can find out where the changes are, without having them put in Italics. I believe in the people enough for that.

The question being taken, the resolve was agreed to.

Mr. MARVIN. I move to instruct the Committee, whose duty it is to provide for printing the resolutions, that the several propositions annexed, which are new portions of the Constitution, be printed in brackets.

Mr. STETSON. I trust that this Convention will adopt the motion of the gentleman from Boston, for this reason. I will venture to say that no member of this Convention can tell in two hours, what part of this revised Constitution is old and what part is new; and I believe, that without any orders, the Committee who have had this Constitution under revision, have made some changes in regard to matters which have never been under consideration by this Convention at all. I think the people have a right to know what portion of the Constitution which is sent out to them for their sanction is new and what portion is not; and they never will know if they have it printed in the way that this is.

Mr. WHITNEY, of Boylston, (interposing). I understood the gentleman to say, that no member could find out in two hours what was new and what was old. I wish to inquire if he is going to make a statement to occupy that length of time, in order that we can try the experiment. [Laughter.]

Mr. STETSON. I can assure the gentleman in the gallery that he has never seen me asleep in this Convention, and he probably will not. I take it, Mr. President, that the people have a right to know precisely what alterations have been made in the Constitution which we send out to them, before they vote for its adoption. I think, therefore, that it is no more than proper, in sending out a proposition of so much importance as a new Constitution, that the people should know how to distinguish between that which is new and that which is old. I trust, Mr. President, that this Convention will pass the resolution of the gentleman from Boston, unless they mean to deceive the people by putting a proposition before them which they know that they cannot understand. I do not want to throw bricks at a man's head, or brick dust into his eyes so that he cannot see. All that I ask is that the proposition may go forth to the people in such a shape and manner that they can understand it. I think that if it should be printed in the form in which this has been printed for us here, there is not one man in ten that could tell what he was voting on—whether a particular proposition was a part of the old Constitution or whether it was something new. I believe that the people of Massachusetts are as well enlightened, and understand their rights as well as the people of any other State in this Union. There is not a State which has a more enlightened constituency than we have in this Commonwealth; but, Sir, I believe, notwithstanding that they are so intelligent they would be apt to get puzzled with this document, printed in this way; for it requires a very astute man to understand all that is new and all that is old in this Constitution.

Mr. DANA, for Manchester. It is proposed, as I understand it, that all the new parts of the Constitution submitted to the people, shall be printed in brackets to distinguish them from the old Constitution. Now there will be one great difficulty in that. Some amendments are merely in the way of transposing words, some where the same substance remains with very little variation of form. The Committee found it necessary to adopt three modes of printing—common type, leaded type, and brackets. I do not believe it possible that by mere brackets amendments can be sufficiently distinguished so as not to mislead the people.

Another difficulty. If it shall be issued in the form of brackets, we shall be held responsible for their accuracy, for the people will rely upon them. I should not like to trust to the accuracy with which any person could do that work. It would be a matter of difference of opinion what should be placed in brackets, and how. I do not think the gentleman from Braintree, (Mr. Stetson,) really thinks the people have an inalienable right to brackets. Will he permit me to ask him whether it would not suit him to have a part in crochets? [Laughter.]

Mr. KNOWLTON, of Worcester. I think the proposition is susceptible of improvement. I therefore move to strike out all after the word “brackets,” and insert in lieu thereof the words “in such form as to distinguish, as far as possible, the amendments from the text of the Constitution.”

Mr. MARVIN, of Boston. I accept the amendment. I take it that if the main amendments, that is those which are entire paragraphs, are put in brackets, and the less important alterations are put in Italics, the amendments would be perfectly obvious to every-body. I trust that the Committee will take that course.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. Marvin, as modified by the motion of Mr. Knowlton, and it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. HATHAWAY, of Freetown. I desire to call the attention of the Committee which reported these resolutions, to the proposition made here in reference to article second, chapter first, which is as follows:—

ART. 2. The political year shall begin on the

Monday.]

REVISED CONSTITUTION.—BOUTWELL—LIVERMORE.

[August 1st.

first Wednesday in January; and the General Court shall assemble every year on the said first Wednesday in January, and shall be dissolved on the day next preceding the first Wednesday in January following, without any proclamation or other act of the governor. But nothing herein contained shall prevent the General Court from assembling at such other times as they shall judge necessary, or when called together by the governor.

The last paragraph of that article was passed over for the purpose of giving the Committee time to make an examination of that matter, and giving an answer to the inquiry which was made in reference to it, and that was, whether the Convention had passed upon that very proposition, and agreed to have it stricken out. I should like to know whether the Committee have satisfied themselves in reference to that matter? Can the Committee answer now, whether the Convention have acted upon it, and whether they have struck it out or retained it?

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin. The Convention had not passed upon it. It stands as it ever has in the articles of amendment to the old Constitution. It was struck out of the original Constitution of 1780, but, by a provision inserted with great care in the amendments, and which annulled a part of the article with which this provision was connected, and this provision was preserved, and has not been acted upon by the Convention. There is nothing upon the record which shows that it has been acted upon.

Mr. LIVERMORE, of Cambridge. A part of the same words were struck out by a Report of the Committee on the Frame of Government, or at least they left out that part of it. The Report was to substitute something for the article as it then stood, and the part relating to the governor having the power to call the legislature together, was not stricken out. But the whole has been inserted into this article, after the old article had been amended, by striking out a part, and a new article substituted for it. It was left out, but the Revising Committee found it in another part of the Constitution, and put it in here.

The PRESIDENT. It can only be reached by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. LIVERMORE. I shall not make a motion in regard to it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Committee on the Frame of Government made no reference whatever to that provision in the Constitution in which this clause was found. No reference whatever.

The PRESIDENT. It appears that no amendment has been made in reference to this matter.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Committee on the subject of Revising the Amendments to the Constitution, were also charged with the matter of preparing an Address to the people of the Commonwealth; and, with the consent of the Chair, and of the Convention, I will read the Address which the Committee has instructed me to report.

The Convention of Delegates, assembled by your authority, and directed to revise the Constitution of the Commonwealth, has now closed its labors; and it seeks only to commend and commit the result to your consideration and final judgment. The necessity for the Convention was great, and its labors have been arduous and protracted. As your delegates, we have sought for the principles of freedom in the ancient institutions of the State; but we have thought it wise also to accept the teachings and experience of nearly a century of independent existence. It has then been our purpose to unite in one system of organic law the principles of American republican institutions, and the experiences of other free States, all contemplated in the light derived from the history and usages of Massachusetts.

And first of all, we think it proper to present for your consideration a complete system of organic law. The present Constitution was adopted in 1780, and there have since been added thirteen important amendments. By these amendments, much of the original text is already annulled, and it is only by a careful and critical analysis and comparison that the existing provisions can be determined. This ought not to be. Constitutional laws should be plain, that they may be impartially interpreted and faithfully executed—"that every man may at all times find his security in them." We have not, then, thought it wise, or even proper, to preserve, as a part of the Constitution, provisions which have long since been annulled; nor do we feel justified in proposing new specific amendments whose adoption will render the fundamental law of the Commonwealth more difficult to be understood and less certain in its requirements.

We have, therefore, taken what remains unchanged of the Constitution of 1780, and the subsequent amendments, preserving the original language wherever it appeared practicable, as the basis of a new Constitution, and incorporated therewith such of the resolutions of this Convention as are necessary to give to the whole, at once, a comprehensive and concise character. This has been our purpose; and if our view of duty is correct, we are entirely justified in submitting so much of our work as will give to the people of Massachusetts a complete system of organic law, as one proposition, for your adoption and ratification. It is undoubtedly true, that when amendments are specific and not numerous, they should be separately submitted to the judgment of the people; but this mode becomes impracticable in the formation of a new government, or the thorough revision of an old one. Our attention has been necessarily directed to every provision of the Constitution, and but one chapter is preserved in its original form. It only remained for us either to submit our work, to be added to the old Constitution as specific amendments, with the conviction that their ratification would render your form of government more complicated than it now is, or else to embody all of the old and new that appears necessary to the safe and harmonious action of the system, and present it as "the Constitution of Massachusetts."

This we now do, and we invite you to consider that, while government is essential to the safety and happiness of each individual, it must necessarily happen that it cannot be in every part alike acceptable to all. "We may not expect," said the founders of the Commonwealth, "to agree in a perfect system of government; this is not the lot of mankind. The great end of government is to promote the supreme good of human society." We commend the new Constitution to you, not as being perfect, but as greatly to be preferred to the existing frame of government. It declares the rights and liberties essential to the freedom of the people; it contains, as we believe, a framework arranged according to reason and correct analogies, and it embodies all the fundamental provisions necessary to a just administration of every department of the government.

You will naturally examine with care the character of the changes we have proposed. We have thought it necessary to make a provision for the purpose of limiting the sessions of the General Court to one hundred days, and to require that the pay of its members shall be fixed by standing laws.

At present the members of the Senate are chosen by the several counties which elect from one to six senators, upon a general ticket. We have provided for the division of the State into forty districts, of equal population, and each entitled to elect one senator.

The basis of the House of Representatives has been a subject of careful and anxious deliberation. Differences of opinion existed among us; but a majority of more than one hundred members determined to preserve the system of town representation, under which Massachusetts has existed so long and prospered so well. We have, then, based the House of Representatives upon the municipal institutions of the State, having reference, so far as practicable, to their relative population. By the proposed system, towns containing less than one thousand inhabitants are entitled to elect a representative for the year when the valuation of estates is settled, and one in addition, annually, for five years out of every decennial period. Towns having a population of one thousand and not more than four thousand inhabitants, are entitled to elect a representative every year; towns of more than four thousand and less than eight thousand, will elect two representatives; towns of eight thousand and less than twelve thousand, will elect three representatives, while towns and cities of twelve thousand inhabitants, will elect four representatives, and one additional representative for each addition of four thousand to their population. We do not claim that this system, separately considered, is precisely equal; but if it is in some degree favorable to the rural districts, the loss sustained by the large towns and cities is in a fair measure compensated by the manifest advantages accorded to them in the constitution of the Council and the Senate. The inequality of representation between particular towns, when tested solely by population, may in some cases apparently be great; but when the rights of different interests and different sections of the Commonwealth are considered in connection with the whole system of elective government, the basis of the House cannot be deemed unequal or unjust. The Senate and Council are based upon population rather than voters, by which the inhabitants of the cities and large towns have influence in these two important departments of the government quite disproportionate to their just elective power.

No human government can attain to theoretic accuracy; and in a state where pursuits, habits, and interests are various, it certainly is not the part of wisdom to place unlimited power in the hands of any. We invite you to consider that the Governor represents the voters of the State; that the Council and Senate represent population, without any reference to voters, and as a consequence, that these two departments of the government will eventually be in the control of the cities and chief towns; and finally, that we have sought only to secure to the several districts and to the agricultural and mechanical population and interests a reasonable share of power in one branch of the Legislature. This influence gives to this portion of the people power to assent to, but never to dictate, the policy of the government. The Convention of 1780 declared that "an exact representation would be impracticable even in a system of government arising from the state of nature, and much more so in a State already divided into nearly three hundred corporations." We have encountered the same difficulty, and hope that we have overcome it in our day as well as they overcame it in their day.

But our deliberations have not been confined to the proposed system. Many of your delegates are of opinion that the State should be divided into districts for the election of representatives, according to the number of voters in each. In this opinion a large majority of the Convention do not concur; but we think it our duty first to interpret the people's will, and then to give a fair opportunity for its expression upon all questions of importance whenever such a course is practicable. We have, therefore, made a constitutional provision that the Legislature of 1856, under the census to be taken in 1855, shall present a district system, which may be then substituted for the one recommended by the Convention, if, in the judgment of the whole people, it is wise to make the change.

Monday,]

REVISED CONSTITUTION, &c. — HALLETT — BUTLER — BIRD — WEEKS — CUSHMAN.

[August 1st.

We have also provided that the cities and large towns shall be so districted for the choice of representatives that no district shall be entitled to elect more than three members. In the judgment of the Convention the election of many officers on a single general ticket is not compatible with the freedom and purity of the representative system.

The property qualification of the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor has been abolished.

The Council has been made elective by the people in single districts, and the records of that body are hereafter to be subject to public examination.

We have provided that the Attorney-General, the Secretary of the Commonwealth, the Auditor and the Treasurer, officers now appointed by the Governor, or chosen by the Legislature, shall hereafter be elected annually by the people; and that the Judges of Probate, Registers of Probate, Sheriffs, Clerks of the Courts, Commissioners of Insolvency, and District-Attorneys, officers now appointed by the Executive or the Courts, shall also be elected by the people for terms of three years.

We have also provided that the Justices of the Supreme Judicial Court and of the Court of Common Pleas, hereafter appointed, shall hold their offices for the term of ten years. In a free government, the people should be relieved in a reasonable time, and by the ordinary course of affairs, from the weight of incompetent or unfaithful public servants. Under the present Constitution a Judge can only be removed by the difficult and unpleasant process of impeachment, or of address. Such remedies will be resorted to only in the most aggravated cases. Under the proposed system we have no apprehension but that faithful and competent Judges will be retained in the public service; while those whose places can be better filled with other men, will retire to private life without violence or ungracious circumstances, and scarcely with observation.

It is proposed that Justices of the Peace shall be divided into two classes. Those whose duties are chiefly ministerial, will be, as heretofore, appointed by the Governor and Council; while those intrusted with judicial authority are to be elected by the people and to hold by a tenure of three years.

Under the original Constitution, voters and public officers were required to possess property qualifications. These have heretofore been removed in part, and we now recommend the entire abolition of the property qualification in the voter for all national and all state officers mentioned in the Constitution. The obligations of citizens to contribute to the public expenses by assessment of taxes are not in any degree changed.

Provision is also made for the secrecy of the ballot. By the ballot the citizen at the same time declares his opinion on public affairs, and asserts his equality with every other citizen.

Freedom of opinion, and freedom in the expression of opinion, are individual rights, to be limited or controlled only by a public necessity. We see no public necessity which ought to deprive the citizen of these rights, and we have therefore made provision for their protection.

We also provide, absolutely, that in many elections, persons having the highest number of votes shall be chosen. This rule has been applied principally to the elections in counties and districts, where the trouble of frequent trials is great. The Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of the Commonwealth, Attorney-General, Treasurer, Auditor, Representatives to the General Court, and town officers, are exceptions to the rule. In case of a failure to elect either of the first six named, the election is referred to the General Court; while subsequent trials may be had for the choice of Representatives and municipal officers. We have, therefore, as we think, retained the majority rule where its application will be least burdensome to the people. At the same time we have provided that the Legislature may substitute the plurality rule whenever the public will shall demand it, with a condition that no act for that purpose shall take effect until one year after its passage. Thus we have given an opportunity to test the wisdom of the plurality system, by experience, and power to apply it to every popular election in the Commonwealth, whenever the deliberate judgment of the people shall require it.

The various provisions relating to the militia have been revised, some important changes have been made, and that department of the government will rest more firmly than ever on a constitutional basis.

Changes are proposed concerning the University at Cambridge, and the General Court is instructed to take means for the enlargement of the school fund, until it shall amount to a sum not less than two millions of dollars.

Although the Constitution has always asserted, in the strongest terms, the right of the people, at all times, to alter, reform, or totally change their frame of government, yet it has been contended by some, that the operation and effect of the specific provisions for amendments, contained therein, have been such as practically to impair or render doubtful this great right. We have, therefore, thought it wise, while we recognize and retain the modes of exercising the right practised hitherto in this Commonwealth, to introduce additional provisions, to meet possible future exigencies, and to enable the people, without controversy, to hold periodical Conventions that shall not be subject to, or restricted by, any previous or subsequent act of the Legislature.

Trusting that you will examine with care the proceedings of the Convention, and the result to which it has come, we deem it unnecessary to explain several less prominent changes proposed in the Constitution of the Commonwealth.

We also submit seven distinct amendments, which are presented separately for your ratification. Some of them are new, and all of them are independent of the frame-work of the government, and may either be adopted or rejected without disturbing the system or harmony of the Constitution. They have all, however, been sustained by decisive majorities of your delegates, and embrace important essential principles in popular government. The formation or the revision of a popular constitution is an epoch in the history of a free people.

We are sensible of the magnitude of the trust which you have confided to us, but it is not more important than the just decision of the question which we submit to you. We have no doubt that your decision will secure a result beneficial to Massachusetts, and, under Divine Providence, will render more and more illustrious our ancient Commonwealth.

The question was then taken upon adopting the Address, and it was agreed to without a division.

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham. I move that the Address which has been read and accepted by the Convention, be signed by the President and Secretary of the Convention, and published.

Mr. BUTLER, of Lowell. Will the gentleman for Wilbraham allow me to suggest an amendment to his motion. In addition to the printing, I suggest that the same number be printed as we have ordered of the Revised Constitution, and that it be circulated among the people—that is 100,000 copies—and bound with them.

Mr. HALLETT. I presume the Address, under that resolution, would be published in connection with the Constitution.

Mr. BIRD, of Walpole. I will read an order which I have drawn up, which covers that matter, and also another matter:—

Ordered, That the Resolves contained in document No. 128, and the Address to the People, signed by the President and the Secretary, be printed in connection with copies of the Revised Constitution ordered to be printed for distribution; and that 35,000 additional copies of said Constitution, with the Resolves and Address, be printed for distribution in accordance with orders already adopted.

The latter clause of the order is a distinct subject, and it is for this reason, that since the passage of the resolve ordering the printing of 100,000 copies, we learn that last winter the legislature ordered the printing of 100,000 copies of the old Constitution, and it was found by them, after distributing the 100,000 copies, they were 35,000 copies short, and they were obliged to order that number of copies more, costing about as much as the original edition of 100,000 copies. It was thought best, therefore, to order that the same number of the new Constitution should be printed. It will be cheaper to do so now than hereafter.

Mr. WEEKS, of Harwich. Where did the gentleman get his information.

Mr. BIRD. From the printer, the sergeant-at-arms, and others.

Mr. WEEKS. I had the honor to offer the resolution myself, and it provided for 30,000 copies.

Mr. BIRD. Then there were 130,000 copies, in all, ordered.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that the question can be first taken upon signing the Address, and then upon the other matter.

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham. I so modify my motion.

The question was then taken upon Mr. Hallett's motion, and it was agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the motion offered by Mr. Bird, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the motion was agreed to.

Pay Roll.

Mr. CUSHMAN, of Bernardston. I now move that the resolve for the payment of members be taken from the table and acted upon.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Report of the Committee on the Pay Roll was then taken up, and read by the Secretary, as follows:—

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

In Convention, August 1, 1853.

The Committee on the Pay Roll, in compliance with an order of the Convention, directing them to make up the pay roll, have attended to that duty, in accordance with a resolve passed on the 28th day of June last, and report the sum herewith, amounting to $114,092, and also report the accompanying order.

For the Committee,

ISAAC LIVERMORE, Chairman.

Ordered, That the Pay Roll of the Convention, as reported by the Committee, in accordance with the resolve of the 28th of June last, and the order of July 29th, be transmitted by the Secretary, to the Auditor of Accounts, and that he be requested to obtain from the Governor a warrant upon the treasury of the Commonwealth, to authorize the payment thereof, and notify the Convention when the warrant has been drawn.

Monday,] DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS. — WALKER — LIVERMORE — BATES — LELAND — EARLE — ADAMS. [August 1st.

Mr. GREENE, of Brookfield. At the proper time I should like to hear the pay roll read. It must prove an interesting document.

The question was taken upon the acceptance and adoption of the Report of the Committee, and it was decided in the affirmative.

Distribution of Documents.

Mr. WALKER, of North Brookfield. I move that the Report of the Special Committee on the distribution of documents, be taken up at the present time.

Mr. GREENE. Before that matter is gone into, I should like to hear the pay roll read. But if the Convention does not want to hear it, I will not urge the matter.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it would not be in order to do so at this time.

Mr. LIVERMORE, from Cambridge. I would suggest the course indicated by the gentleman from Worcester, (Mr. Earle,) that it be read by its title. [Laughter.]

The question was then taken on Mr. Walker's motion, and it was agreed to.

The Secretary then read the Report, as follows:—

1. Resolved, That White & Potter be instructed to deliver, without additional charge, the remaining numbers of the quarto edition of the Journal of Debates, at such places in Boston, as the members shall respectively order.

2. Resolved, That each member of this Convention be furnished with one copy of the Journal of the Debates, of the octavo edition, additionally to the one heretofore ordered.

3. Resolved, That the Messenger be directed to deliver, without additional cost, the copies of the Debates aforesaid, together with the Journal of the Convention, heretofore ordered, with the completed file of the documents belonging to each member, at such place in Boston as the members shall respectively order. And also to send, in the usual manner, the copies of the Journal and Debates to the towns, cities, and public bodies, as ordered by the Convention, and also to send to each town or city, its quota, in proportion to population, of copies of the New Constitution, heretofore ordered to be published.

The PRESIDENT. To that Report the gentleman from Worcester, (Mr. Earle,) moves to add the following words: "That no member shall be entitled to more than three copies."

Mr. BATES, of Plymouth. Before the Convention in this stage of its session pass a vote to give each member of the Convention three copies, amounting to fifteen or eighteen dollars to each member, I hope they will stop and look at it. Besides that, it enjoins upon these persons to do certain work, without pay hereafter. I suppose by the Act calling this Convention, the Convention is to provide its own expenses. They have no more authority to order this Messenger to do any work without pay, than we have to order the Governor to do so.

Mr. WALKER, of North Brookfield. It has been my misfortune on several occasions, while acting as chairman of a Committee, to present reports, with some of the propositions of which I did not agree. That is the case in the present instance. The Report was almost unanimously adopted in Committee, though I dissented from the second resolve which provides that three copies of the octavo edition shall be furnished to members in addition to what they already have. I presume that the resolve introduced at the beginning of the session by the gentleman from Cambridge, was a mistake, because under the resolve, it would have required nine thousand copies of the Debates to supply all the members, if they had elected to take as many as they were entitled to under that order. That being the case, we are brought into the condition in which we now are, with one hundred members of this Convention without a copy of the quarto edition, and this second resolve says that all alike shall receive three copies of the quarto edition. That did not strike me as just. It seemed to me that those who had taken more of the other, should have but one copy of the quarto form. I think the operation of that second resolve would not look well under the circumstances which surround the case, and therefore, I hope the amendment will prevail. Otherwise, the Report is correct in every respect, in my judgment.

In regard to the duties which we impose upon the Messenger, I will say that we waited upon him upon the subject, and he consented to perform all those duties. The duties must be performed by somebody, or else the documents will not be distributed.

Mr. LELAND, of Holliston. When this subject was under discussion on a former occasion, the gentleman from Worcester, (Mr. Earle,) said that I had received twenty-one copies.

Mr. EARLE, of Worcester. I rise to call the gentleman to order for misstating what I said. I made no such statement.

Mr. LELAND. I do not know what point of order there is in that. All I can say is, that I understood the gentleman to say, at the time referred to, that I had received twenty-one copies, and that I now wanted three copies more. I did say that I thought it but fair that if one member was to receive three copies of the bound Reports, it was but fair that all should receive them.

Mr. BATES, of Plymouth. The Convention, by two several orders, have directed what should be done with every copy. If the Convention passes this resolve, they must direct the Committee what to do, and make all needful provisions to enable them to do it.

Mr. EARLE. My proposition does not enlarge the distribution, but restricts it. By an order of the Convention, the members were entitled to receive a certain number of copies of these Reports. Three-fourths of the members have received them, while the other fourth have not got any, and it is imperative upon the Secretary to furnish them. This amendment proposes to limit the distribution to three copies to each member, including the one copy which all the members are to receive. So that the members will get but two copies as an offset to the twenty-one copies the other members have already got. If they have not got them they have got their equivalent in newspapers. It appears to me that there is nothing but what is perfectly fair in this proposition. I did not suppose that there was a man in the Convention who would raise a voice against it.

Mr. BATES. I move that when the question is taken it be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. ALVORD, for Montague. I move that the whole subject be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. BIRD, of Walpole. Gentlemen ought to remember that there is a great deal more to do than the mere distribution of these Reports. But I believe that both the Messenger and the State printer agree to do this work without any extra pay, and I think, therefore, that no question ought to be raised on that head.

Mr. ALVORD. I listened attentively to the reading of the resolves, and I understood them merely to refer to the distribution of the Reports. If the Messenger is willing to do this work without any extra pay, I can have no possible objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not well pleased, either with the Report of the Committee or the amendment. If I understood the latter, it proposes to give three copies of the bound Reports to each member.

Mr. EARLE. Only to those who have not already got any copies.

Mr. ADAMS, of Lowell. I understand that at an early period of the session many members of the Convention availed themselves of the privilege of the order presented by the gentleman from Cambridge, and passed by the Convention, of taking two, three, or half a dozen copies. I understood the proposition of the gentleman from Worcester to be that those who had received three or six copies of the quarto form, were not to receive any of the octavo. I understand that the Debates as circulated in the quarto form, without binding, are to cost $1.50 per copy, and that the bound octavo volumes will cost $5 per copy, and that those who have not subscribed for the quarto copies will be entitled to $15 worth of the octavo.

Mr. EARLE. The statement that has just been made is calculated to deceive. In fact there is no truth in it. [Loud cries of "Order, Order."] I do not mean to say that the statement is not true, as the gentleman made it, [laughter,] but that in point of fact, there is no truth in it. [Cries of "Order, Order."] The State printers have stated the matter to me thus: The whole amount of type setting they have charged, in making up their account, upon the octavo form, and have charged nothing for composition upon the quarto. That makes the octavo form nominally cost a good deal more. If there is any difference it is in favor of the octavo form. But there is no difference about it. The composition is the same and the press work is the same.

Now I understand that even if this order is adopted, the State will still have fifteen hundred volumes, or more, left at the disposal of the legislature. That body will probably place them at the disposal of the governor and council, who, again, will probably distribute them amongst their friends.

[Loud cries of "Question, Question."]

Mr. DAVIS, of Worcester. By this order, if it is amended as proposed by my colleague, and adopted by the Convention, every member will receive one copy of the bound Reports, and no one can receive more than three copies.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to know how you are going to get back the copies from those who have got their twenty copies?

Mr. EARLE. The order relates only to the octavo edition.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was rejected, on a division—ayes, 107; noes, 67.

Mr. BATES, of Plymouth. I wish simply to state one fact in this connection. Each member has voted himself one copy already, of the octavo edition—that is upon the journal—and now it is proposed to give each member two copies more, as the motion is that the number shall not exceed

Monday,]

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS, &c. — EARLE — HALLETT — CARRUTHERS — PAIGE — BIRD.

[August 1st.]

three copies; so that if this passes, each member will have voted himself three copies, or six volumes, amounting to fifteen dollars in value, which will be rung from one end of Massachusetts to the other.

Mr. EARLE. If there is any apprehension that members by that vote are depriving themselves of one copy, it is very easy to add the words, "under this order."

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham. Is the question susceptible of division?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the question on the several resolves may be taken separately.

Mr. HALLETT. Then I call for a division. I want that part which relates to voting three copies, put separately. We have each got one copy, and I think we ought to be satisfied with that.

Mr. CARRUTHERS, of Salisbury. I wish to ask a question, in order to obtain a little information about this matter. If a delegate has subscribed for, and received his twenty-one newspapers, he is to have three copies of the Reports, as I understand it; but if he has only subscribed for fifteen newspapers, and has made up the remainder with documents, is he not to have any extra? I want to have that matter plainly understood, whether we are going to vote three copies to those who have had their twenty-one newspapers, and are not to vote any copies to those who have had no newspapers.

Mr. PAIGE, of Boston. As I am one of those who have not subscribed for newspapers, I may perhaps vote on this subject with as good grace as anybody. I understand that we have already voted one copy to each member—that each member should have one copy of the octavo edition, and that should be the end of it, whether he had received newspapers or not. If a man has had twenty-one copies already, which he has taken in the place of newspapers, he had a right so to do; and I see no difficulty in putting the proposition fairly. We have already voted to give each member one copy in the octavo form—my proposition is to give each member one more, so that each member shall have two copies, whether he has had newspapers or not. We cannot go back and undo what has already been done.

Mr. CHAPIN, of Worcester. I like the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Boston. Some persons were not quite so keenly anxious as others for these Reports, and subscribed for newspapers, while others thought that they would take these instead of newspapers. Some members were "green" enough not to see this until after they had subscribed for their newspapers; and those who were sharper than the rest of us, will of course have the profit of it.

Mr. EARLE. I have not made the motion which I did, because I cared about having a copy of this work in addition to the copy to which I am already entitled; but I did so simply to see if the Convention would do an act of justice. I wanted to see if those members who had received their copies of the work under a vote of this Convention, would now allow those who were entitled under the same vote to other copies but who could not obtain them, to have partial justice done to them—whether they would not be willing to furnish the Secretary with the means of carrying out in part, their own vote. If they are not disposed to do that, I, for one, shall vote against the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Boston; for that, instead of doing justice, is giving to those who have not received anything, only just as much as it gives to those who have already received from ten to twenty copies.

Mr. OLIVER, of Lawrence, moved the previous question, which was ordered.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. Paige, it was agreed to; and the question was then stated on ordering the resolves to a second reading, as amended.

Mr. EARLE asked for a division of the question; and the question being put on ordering the first and third resolves to a second reading, it was agreed to.

The question then recurred on ordering the second resolve to a second reading; which resolve provided that each member of the Convention should be furnished with an additional copy of the octavo edition.

Mr. BOUTWELL, for Berlin, moved that the resolve lie upon the table, which was not agreed to.

The question then being taken, the resolve was ordered to a second reading.

Rights of Colored Citizens.

Mr. STETSON, of Braintree, moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the Convention ordered the protest of William C. Nell and others to be entered upon the journal of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT. The motion lies over until to-morrow, under the rule. [Laughter.]

Mr. STETSON. I move a suspension of the rule.

Mr. HALLETT, for Wilbraham. I rise to a question of privilege, in regard to this matter. I should not, on my own account or interest have called up the subject which the gentleman from Braintree has moved to reconsider; but it being presented, I think it my duty to refer to this protest, because I suppose that it was intended to bear upon myself, and others much more distinguished gentlemen than myself—

Mr. BIRD, of Walpole. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. The point which I make is, that the gentleman must state his question of privilege, before he speaks upon it.

Mr. HALLETT. That is just what I am doing. The Convention have ordered to be entered upon the journal of this body, a statement in the form of a protest, which places some of the members of the Convention in a false position, and attributes language to them which they did not utter. I take it that that is a question of privilege.

Mr. BIRD. I ask for the ruling of the Chair upon that point.

Mr. HALLETT. Certain statements were made upon this floor in debate with regard to the admission of colored persons into the militia of the United States, and I find that in a protest which has been received and acted on while I was absent, there is a statement manifestly, though not by name, attributed to me, which I never made. The Convention, I presume, without understanding the matter at the moment, by a party vote, ordered that statement to go upon its records. It is wholly immaterial to me whether the Convention choose to persist in that course or not, as respects myself; but before the question is decided, I want it fully understood that the protest which they have ordered to be entered upon their journal contains intimations against two of the members of this body; I want the Convention also to know what they are charged with as a body, in that protest, so that they may knowingly decide whether they are ready to cause to be placed upon their records a statement that they have done an act which is unconstitutional, and also that in their opinion, a law of the United States is unconstitutional. That protest farther says, among other things, that a member of this Convention, in a speech made to this Convention, declared that if a colored person were to be elected governor of Massachusetts, the United States would interpose to prevent his acting as commander-in-chief of the Commonwealth. Now, Sir, no such thing was said by any member, and I do not want that class of our fellow-citizens, who very honestly, I dare say, make this protest, and whose rights I respect as much as any body, to labor under a misapprehension on that subject, for I have no doubt they were misled by some false report. I said all that was directly said upon that topic except the similar opinion given by the member from Boston, (Mr. Choate,) and what I did say was precisely this—

Mr. BIRD, (interposing). Mr. President: This discussion is entirely out of place at this time, for the gentleman from Wilbraham is not alluded to by name, or in any way that would lead any one to suppose he was alluded to at all, in that document.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will take the liberty to state that as this is the last day of the session, and the motion for reconsideration must be entertained now or it never can be entertained, the Chair will admit the motion without putting the question on a suspension of the rules. The question is, therefore, upon the motion of the gentleman from Braintree that the vote of the Convention be reconsidered, by which the petition of William C. Nell and others was ordered to be entered upon the journal.

Mr. BUTLER. Upon the motion of reconsideration I move the previous question.

Mr. HALLETT. I hope the gentleman will have the courtesy to withdraw that motion and allow me to finish my statement.

Mr. BUTLER. I certainly will.

Mr. HALLETT. The language attributed in that petition to a member of this Convention, although it was not what I said, yet evidently could be attributed to no one but me, because that was the line of argument which I used, although the statement which I made was entirely different. It was in reply to a question of the gentleman from Natick, who now occupies the chair, (Mr. Wilson,) when the resolutions in relation to the militia were under discussion, as to what would be the powers of the governor of this Commonwealth under the Constitution of the United States, if the person who should be elected governor of this Commonwealth should happen to be a person of color; and my exact language, as reported at the time, I now quote.

What I said in answer to that question was:—

"That while the Commonwealth of Massachusetts by her Constitution makes no distinction of color in the choice of governor, yet the Constitution of the United States gives the power to congress to declare what shall constitute the militia;

Monday,]

CLOSING REMARKS, &c. — HALLETT — BIRD — WILSON — LOTHROP — EAMES — HILLARD.

[August 1st.

and in the exercise of that power congress has said that it shall be white citizens. Consequently although a colored citizen might be the governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and by virtue of that office, commander-in-chief, yet he can never be enrolled as a soldier in the militia or be an officer of the militia of the United States; and if, under such circumstances, the governor should be a colored man, you must find some one else to command the militia, if you mean to conform to the supreme law of the land for organizing and disciplining the militia."

Now, Sir, that was what I said, and it is entirely different from the language attributed in the protest. It rests simply upon this ground: The Constitution has given to Congress power to say who shall constitute the militia, and they have said that male white citizens shall constitute that body. But Congress has made no such distinction as to the army or the navy, and a colored person may be commander-in-chief of the army, or a commodore in the navy. But congress, in the full exercise of constitutional power, has declared that white citizens alone shall belong to the militia, and, therefore, this Convention has no power to compose the militia of such persons; and hence, a protest against the Convention for not doing what it has no power to do, is simply an absurdity to enter upon the records.

Mr. DAVIS, of Fall River. I would inquire whether, upon a question of privilege, the main question can be argued?

Mr. HALLETT. I was making a privileged explanation, and, if the gentleman had preserved his politeness for a few minutes longer, he would have saved himself the trouble of this interruption. I am aware of the state of feeling existing with some members in this Convention, upon this subject of color, but I desire to stand right in every matter touching the Union of the States, and to place myself upon constitutional ground; and if the Convention see fit to place me falsely upon their record, and put what is an untruth there, with them the responsibility will rest, and discredit does not attach to me.

Mr. BIRD. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question first recurred upon the motion to reconsider the vote, by which the protest was ordered to be placed upon the records of the Convention, and, being put, it was decided in the affirmative; there being, on a division—ayes, 91; noes, 57.

The question then being upon the motion to enter the protest upon the journal of the Convention—

Mr. BIRD moved to lay the protest upon the table, which motion was agreed to.

So it was laid upon the table.

The PRESIDENT here announced the Committee heretofore ordered to examine and count the return of votes on the several Constitutional Propositions, to consist of the following gentlemen:—

Messrs. Boutwell, for Berlin, Dana, " Manchester,
Giles, of Boston,
Morton, " Andover,
Upham, " Salem,
Butler, " Lowell,
Wilson, " Natick,
Griswold, for Erving,
Frothingham, of Charlestown,

Wood, of Middleborough,
Willard, " Boston,
Aspinwall, " Brookline,
Chapin, " Springfield,
Sleeper, " Roxbury,
Allen, " Worcester,
French, " New Bedford,
Oliver, " Lawrence, Eames, " Washington,
Phinney, for Chatham, and White, of Quincy.

Mr. WILSON. I would inquire of the Chair if there is any more business before the Convention?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is not aware of any unfinished business.

Closing Remarks.

Mr. LOTHROP, of Boston. I should like to inquire if the Chair has been notified of a vote passed by the Convention on Saturday last, presenting to him the thanks of this body for the manner in which he has discharged the duties of the Chair?

I hope, Mr. President, we shall not separate without a few words from some gentleman and from the Chair, suitable and appropriate to the close of the highly important duties in which we have been engaged. I, for one, Sir, may take this occasion to say, perhaps, that I regretted that the subject upon which we acted on Saturday last, was brought forward at that precise time. I think it would have been much better, more appropriate, and more interesting to all of us, if it had been deferred until we approached the closing hours of the session, and of our official connection as members of this Convention. It may not be improper for me, also to say, that for one, I regretted the precise phraseology of that vote. Gentlemen know very well that I am no party politician. I am here with political opinions and convictions more in harmony with one party than another; and to those convictions I have aimed to be true, and presume we all have had a similar aim. But I am also here, with those views, feelings and relations, which my profession disposes me to cherish towards all men of all parties. I know not that I am competent to judge of this matter, but it does seem to me that men of all parties here, should be ready to give a hearty, full, and generous response to a vote of thanks to our presiding officer. It does seem to me that we, all of us, owe to him that expression of feeling. I have never before been a member of a deliberative assembly, and am not, therefore, able to judge by comparison and contrast, but I presume every man here, to whatever political party he belongs, and however large his legislative experience, and, although he may, occasionally have differed from or disliked the rulings of the Chair, will yet—when he considers all the difficulties of the position—the duties, always arduous and often delicate that devolve upon it—be disposed to admit that the distinguished gentleman who has filled the Chair, has presided over the deliberations of this assembly with eminent ability, with great impartiality, with a patient courtesy, and constant and assiduous fidelity. This is very strongly my own impression, and I think that we owe it very much to him, that we have been able to conduct our discussions and complete our business with so much harmony—with the introduction of so little that was personal, improper or unparliamentary.

I hope, Sir, to hear on the part of other gentlemen, an expression of similar sentiments, and I hope that the Chair will be disposed to say to us some kind, appropriate and touching words before we depart from these halls for the last time, that we may all go to our homes feeling kindly disposed to each other, inspired with a loftier patriotism and a deeper interest in the good old Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which we have all been here endeavoring to serve, according to our honest convictions and to the best of our ability, and whose glory and prosperity we would have ever increasing and perpetual.

Mr. EAMES, of Washington. I can say for one, that I have been much gratified with the manner in which the Chair has conducted and managed the business of this Convention. This is the second Convention for revising the Constitution of which I have had the honor of being a member, and I can say for one, that I have felt much gratified at the unanimity of feeling which has generally pervaded our deliberations.

I was much pleased with the remarks which fell from the gentleman from Pittsfield, (Mr. Briggs,) on Saturday last, and I can say that my feelings correspond with the sentiments which he then expressed. It is not any way likely, according to the course of human events, that we shall all meet again. There are only six of us who were members of the Convention of 1820, and it is seldom that any of us meet in two Conventions to amend the organic law. I had the impression that in the Convention of 1820 there was but one individual who had been a member of the Convention of 1780. But I have been told that there were two. The Hon. John Quincy Adams was one. For one, I can say, I part with my associates here in perfect friendship, and shall ever meet them hereafter with the same feeling.

Mr. HILLARD, of Boston. I certainly respond most cordially and sincerely to all that has fallen from my valued friend from Boston, (Mr. Lothrop,) and, indeed, were I to express my full sense of the ability with which the duties of the Chair have been performed, and of the obligations we are under to the President, I should—that gentleman being present—consider myself as passing beyond the limits of decorum and good taste. I can only say, in recalling the conduct and bearing of the gentleman who has presided over our deliberations, I cannot bring to my thoughts any person in the Convention or out of it, whom we could have substituted for him, and been gainers in the exchange. In looking back upon our discussions, we have a right to say that they have been characterized by a more than common degree of decorum and propriety, considering the nature of the topics and the zeal of the speakers. Of course it is impossible, in collision of strong convictions and strong feelings, that occasional sparks of excitement should not have flashed forth. But I submit, that in comparison with similar bodies, we may look back with satisfaction and pride at the course of our debates, and especially at the harmonious feelings with which our deliberations are brought to a close.

To those who have had experience in such bodies, I need not say how much we are indebted to the spirit which has presided over us, to the spirit of mingled firmness, tact, and moderation,

Monday,]

CLOSING REMARKS.—HALLETT—MARVIN—WILSON—LOTHROP—WALKER—BANKS.

[August 1st.

that has overshadowed us from the beginning; and I, for one, am ready to make acknowledgment in the fullest and amplest terms.

Mr. HALLETT, of Wilbraham. I think we cannot separate without reflecting with some degree of interest and intenseness, upon that very important relation which has existed between you, Sir, as the presiding officer of this body, and ourselves, individually, as its members. Sir, while all the people of this earth—consisting now of some nine hundred millions of souls—are under different forms of government, which have existed from time immemorial, this spot upon God's earth, the United States of America, composed of twenty-three or twenty-four millions of people, is the only place, and this the only people, in which such a Convention as this could assemble for such a purpose as that for which it was called. Now, that in the simple exercise of the peaceful right of citizens, as delegates of the people of the Commonwealth, we have come here unmolested and quietly to frame a constitutional government to be submitted to the people, upon which they are to say "yes" or "no," and which, if they say "yes," is to take the place of the old government, by as easy a transition as takes place in ordinary affairs, and that this can be done and that we are the agents, is certainly a thing that can never pass from our minds. It is a link that should bind us together as brethren while we live. Let us never forget, if we should hereafter be brought in any conflict with each other, that here, in this Convention, we stood together, delegates of the people, with this great power of proposing a form of government for their adoption.

Sir, that the proceedings of this Convention have been conducted so harmoniously, and that its results have thus far been so successful and satisfactory, and will terminate, as I think, so usefully to the Commonwealth, has been, in a great measure, owing to the manner in which you have exercised the authority with which the Convention invested you. I am sure that every heart will feel, and every voice will respond to the resolution of thanks for the manner in which you have presided over us.

Mr. MARVIN, of Boston. Before any remarks are made by the President, I hope that some gentleman will close our session with prayer. I feel that we are all indebted to the kind providence of Almighty God, for having preserved us, with one exception, in life and health. We began by imploring the blessing of God; let us close our labors by rendering him thanks, and giving him praise.

Mr. WILSON, of Natick. The hours of this Convention are numbered. Our duties here are performed. To the people we have committed the results of our deliberations and labors. After ninety days of toil together, we are about to part, to meet not again in this world of vicissitude and death. In this closing hour it is proper for us to turn our thoughts to that Being who has preserved us. I move that the Convention invite the Rev. Dr. Lothrop to close our session with prayer.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will assume the consent of the Convention, and invites the Rev. Mr. Lothrop to perform that duty.

Mr. LOTHROP then took the President's desk, and offered the following Prayer.

Almighty God! We began our labors by invoking Thy blessing; we would close them by again invoking that blessing, by lifting up devout and grateful hearts to Thee, the God of our fathers, and thanking Thee for all Thy mercies in past generations, and for all Thy goodness to us, here present, in preserving our lives, and in enabling us to attend faithfully to the duties that have devolved upon us. We thank Thee, O God, for all the harmony and good feeling, for all the mutual respect and kindness that have prevailed through our deliberations. We thank Thee that, guided and sustained by Thy good providence, we have now been enabled to bring these deliberations to a close; and we would commend ourselves, and the great work on which we have been engaged, and all the high and important interests of this ancient and honorable Commonwealth, to Thy divine disposal, to Thy protection and care, and to Thy parental providence. May we, O God—may all the people of the Commonwealth—continue to adore, and reverence, and love, and serve Thee, the God of our fathers, and so walk in the ways of virtue, of uprightness, of all Christian grace and godliness, that we may continue to be a name and a praise among the communities of the earth—that the blessing of the Lord our God may be upon us, even as it was upon our fathers. May Thy peace abide in all our hearts, Thy blessing be upon all our families, Thy goodness and favor attend us, now and forever. We ask these mercies through Him who loved us, and gave Himself for us, to whom be glory, in His church, forever.

Mr. WALKER, of North Brookfield, moved that the Convention do now adjourn sine die.

The motion was agreed to.

President's Address.

The PRESIDENT. Gentlemen of the Convention. Availing myself of the privilege usually afforded those who stand in the position I now occupy, before I speak that word which severs our official relations with each other, and with the Commonwealth, I return you my sincere thanks for the generous kindness with which you have received the limited measure of fidelity and capacity I have been able to bring to the discharge of my duties.

There are many reasons why this generosity should be grateful to me. But none is stronger than that which arises from the high character of the assembly to whose indulgence I am so large a debtor. For patient investigation, assiduous, unremitting, and conscientious devotion to laborious duties, in a most oppressive season, I believe no representative assembly ever surpassed that whose labors are now about to close. It is not for me to distrust the wisdom of the counsels by which you have been guided. I am impressed with the conviction that your labors will be approved; that the results you have reached will be ratified by the people of the Commonwealth. The moment that fortune has assigned you for their submission to the people you represent, is auspicious. Although the silent dial before us indicates a brief moment beyond, yet we have not closed the day which is the anniversary of the embarkation of the Pilgrim Fathers; of the inauguration of that series of sublime events that has resulted in the consummation of constitutional liberty, and permanent popular governments.

Whatever destiny may be in store for our republic—whether it be amid the convulsions of distant empires, to sway the sceptre of earth's seas, or with an expansive power hitherto unknown, to absorb and consolidate in a single state, of limited powers, the territory of continents, or to achieve a nobler triumph in the domain of industry, science and art—I trust that Massachusetts, true to the instincts of her nature, as colony or commonwealth, may still stand at the head of the column of progressive States; her Constitution without fault, and her people without fear.

I am sure I do not misinterpret the feelings of your hearts, in saying that we cannot separate without chastening our anticipated joys by recalling the memory of one, whose seat to-night is vacant, whose life was distinguished by the virtues which adorn human nature, but who in health and high hopes has been swept from among us by the hand of death. We cannot separate without a tear of sympathy and consolation for the happy family by this bereavement made desolate; nor yet without a consciousness that the loss which is ours, is the gain of our brother who is gone; that it is for us to mourn for the living only, and not for the dead. We cannot separate without grateful and fervent acknowledgments for the Divine goodness that has preserved so many of us from suffering, sickness, and death.

But the delays of the day's session, the tediousness of the parting act and word, have already detained you too long from the invigorating ocean air, and the sweet and pure breeze of inland and highland; from the loved sights and sounds of home; the congratulations of friends, and the applause of satisfied constituencies, that must revive your exhausted energies, and enable you to recall, without pain, the laborious and anxious days we have passed together; joys that might almost renew a life under the hand of death. No act or word of mine shall add to the unwelcome detention. Health, happiness, honor, to you all, gentlemen. Your kindness is engraven on my heart, where, every day, I will turn the leaf to read it.

It remains for me but to announce that the Convention of 1853 is adjourned, without day.

APPENDIX.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

In the Year of our Lord One Thousand Eight Hundred and Fifty-Two.

AN ACT

RELATING TO THE CALLING A CONVENTION OF DELEGATES OF THE PEOPLE, FOR THE PURPOSE OF REVISING THE CONSTITUTION.

Be it Enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

SECTION 1. The inhabitants of the several cities, towns, districts, and places within this Commonwealth, qualified to vote for senators or representatives in the general court, shall, on the second Monday of November next, at the meetings to be then held in the several cities and towns in the Commonwealth, for the choice of governor, lieutenant-governor, senators and representatives in the general court, an article for this purpose being inserted in the warrants calling said meetings, give in their votes by ballot on this question: "Is it expedient that delegates should be chosen to meet in convention for the purpose of revising or altering the constitution of government of this Commonwealth?" And the vote upon said question shall be in open meeting, and the votes in the several cities and towns in the Commonwealth shall be received, sorted, counted, declared, and transmitted to the Secretary of the Commonwealth, in the same manner as the votes for governor, lieutenant-governor, and senators are now received, sorted, counted, declared and transmitted by the constitution and laws of the Commonwealth; and all returns not thus made shall be rejected in the counting. And the Governor and Council shall open and examine the returns, made as aforesaid, and count the votes given on the said question; and the governor shall, by public proclamation, to be made on or before the first Wednesday in January next, make known the result, by declaring the number appearing in favor of choosing delegates for the purpose aforesaid, and the number of votes appearing against the same; and if it shall appear that a majority of the votes given in and returned as aforesaid are in favor of choosing delegates as aforesaid, the same shall be deemed and taken to be the will of the people of the Commonwealth, that a Convention should meet accordingly; and in case of such majority, the governor shall call upon the people to elect delegates to meet in Convention, in the manner hereinafter provided.

SECT. 2. If it shall be declared by the said proclamation, that the majority of votes, as aforesaid, is in favor of choosing delegates, as above-mentioned, the inhabitants of the several cities and towns within the Commonwealth, now entitled any one year to send one or more representatives to the general court, shall, on the first Monday of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, assemble in their several meetings, to be duly notified by warrant from the selectmen of the several towns and the mayor and aldermen of the several cities, and shall elect one or more delegates, not exceeding the number of representatives to which each town or city was entitled last year, it being the year in which the valuation of estates in the Commonwealth was settled, to meet delegates from other towns and cities in Convention, for the purposes hereinafter expressed. And at such meetings of the inhabitants, every person entitled to vote for representatives in the general court, shall have a right to vote in the choice of delegates, and the same officers, in the several cities and towns in the Commonwealth, shall preside at such elections, as now preside in the choice of representatives to the general court; and the votes for said delegates shall be received, sorted, counted, declared, recorded, and copies thereof delivered to the delegates chosen, in the same manner as is now provided for in the case of representatives to the general court. And all laws now in force, regulating the duty and conduct of town and city officers, sheriffs, magistrates, and electors, in the election of governor, lieutenant-governor, senators and representatives, shall, as far as applicable, apply, and be in full force and operation, as to all meetings holden, and elections and returns made, under this act, or which by this act are required to be holden or made, and upon the like forfeitures and penalties.

SECT. 3. The persons so elected delegates shall meet in Convention in the State House, in Boston, on the first Wednesday in May, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three; and they shall be the judges of the returns and elections of their own members, and may adjourn from time to time; and one hundred of the persons elected shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business; and they shall proceed, as soon as may be, to organize themselves in Convention, by choosing a president and such other officers as they may deem expedient, and by establishing proper rules of proceeding; and when organized, they may take into consideration the propriety and expediency of revising the present Constitution of government of this Commonwealth, or the propriety and expediency of making any, and if any, what alterations or amendments, in the present Constitution of government of this Commonwealth. And such alterations or amendments, when made and adopted by the said Convention, shall be submitted to the people for their ratification and adoption, in such manner as the said Convention shall direct; and if ratified by the people in the manner directed by the said Convention, the Constitution shall be deemed and taken to be altered or amended accordingly; and if not so ratified, the present Constitution shall be and remain the Constitution of Government of this Commonwealth.

SECT. 4. The said Convention shall establish the pay or compensation of its officers and members, and the expense of its session; and his excellency the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Council, is authorized to draw his warrant on the treasury therefor.

SECT. 5. The Secretary of the Commonwealth is hereby directed forthwith, after the passage thereof, to transmit printed copies of this Act to the selectmen of each town, and the mayor and aldermen of each city within the Commonwealth; and whenever the governor shall issue his proclamation, calling upon the people to elect delegates, to meet in Convention as aforesaid, the said secretary shall also, immediately thereafter, transmit printed copies of said proclamation, attested by himself, to the selectmen of each town, and the mayor and aldermen of each city, in the Commonwealth.

[Approved, May 7, 1852.]

ABSTRACT OF VOTES.

ABSTRACT OF THE RETURNS OF VOTES

For and against calling a Convention to Revise the Constitution, under the Act of May 7, 1852.

ELECTION, NOVEMBER 8, 1852.

COUNTY OF SUFFOLK.				COUNTY OF MIDDLESEX—Con.				COUNTY OF WORCESTER—Con.
TOWNS.	Whole No.	For.	Against.	TOWNS.	Whole No.	For.	Against.	TOWNS.	Whole No.	For.	Against.
Boston, . . .	9,974	3,458	6,456	Concord, . . .	270	164	106	Hardwick, . . .	318	185	133
Chelsea, . . .	790	420	370	Dracut, . . .	246	153	93	Harvard, . . .	273	180	93
North Chelsea, . . .	56	18	38	Dunstable, . . .	126	69	57	Holden, . . .	327	203	124
Winthrop, . . .	37	21	16	Framingham, . . .	554	199	355	Hubbardston, . . .	322	260	72
4 Towns, . . .	10,859	3,977	6,880	Groton, . . .	305	159	146	Lancaster, . . .	231	54	177
COUNTY OF ESSEX.				Holliston, . . .	324	213	111	Leicester, . . .	389	281	108
Amesbury, . . .	545	323	222	Hopkinton, . . .	381	291	90	Leominster, . . .	588	377	211
Andover, . . .	721	439	282	Lexington, . . .	261	101	160	Lunenburg, . . .	238	159	79
Beverly, . . .	885	490	395	Lincoln, . . .	105	44	61	Mendon, . . .	182	141	41
Boxford, . . .	173	34	139	Littleton, . . .	155	91	64	Millford, . . .	657	466	191
Bradford, . . .	218	127	91	Lowell, . . .	4,100	2,253	1,847	Millbury, . . .	412	294	118
Danvers, . . .	1,274	638	636	Malden, . . .	492	251	241	New Braintree, . . .	120	61	69
Essex, . . .	241	160	81	Marlborough, . . .	464	357	107	Northborough, . . .	298	184	114
Georgetown, . . .	353	194	159	Medford, . . .	594	298	296	Northbridge, . . .	272	150	122
Gloucester, . . .	708	395	313	Melrose, . . .	209	151	58	North Brookfield, . . .	319	249	70
Groveland, . . .	243	151	92	Natick, . . .	434	217	217	Oakham, . . .	145	102	43
Hamilton, . . .	164	94	70	Newton, . . .	581	245	336	Oxford, . . .	401	272	129
Haverhill, . . .	1,108	644	464	Pepperell, . . .	234	110	124	Paxton, . . .	161	126	35
Ipswich, . . .	424	251	173	Reading, . . .	557	281	276	Petersham, . . .	270	160	110
Lawrence, . . .	1,046	556	490	Sherborn, . . .	141	44	97	Phillipston, . . .	136	48	88
Lynn, . . .	1,834	1,006	828	Shirley, . . .	197	116	81	Princeton, . . .	227	141	86
Lynnfield, . . .	92	69	23	Somerville, . . .	380	174	206	Royalston, . . .	229	66	163
Manchester, . . .	219	157	62	South Reading, . . .	388	218	170	Rutland, . . .	172	132	40
Marblehead, . . .	596	397	199	Stoneham, . . .	388	276	112	Shrewsbury, . . .	320	229	91
Methuen, . . .	334	149	185	Stowe, . . .	139	82	57	Southborough, . . .	211	155	56
Middleton, . . .	126	94	32	Sudbury, . . .	215	136	79	Southbridge, . . .	411	261	150
Newbury, . . .	148	39	109	Tewksbury, . . .	156	62	94	Spencer, . . .	473	248	225
Newburyport, . . .	1,227	463	764	Townsend, . . .	281	190	91	Sterling, . . .	327	138	189
Rockport, . . .	387	245	142	Tyngsborough, . . .	91	50	41	Sturbridge, . . .	330	217	113
Rowley, . . .	165	22	133	Waltham, . . .	600	310	290	Sutton, . . .	360	298	62
Salem, . . .	1,806	686	1,120	Watertown, . . .	341	154	187	Templeton, . . .	368	236	132
Salisbury, . . .	338	206	132	Wayland, . . .	194	109	85	Upton, . . .	333	213	120
Saugus, . . .	251	191	60	West Cambridge, . . .	268	124	144	Uxbridge, . . .	322	211	111
Swampscott, . . .	99	86	13	Westford, . . .	235	130	105	Warren, . . .	256	140	116
Topsfield, . . .	139	67	132	Weston, . . .	152	76	76	Webster, . . .	336	200	136
Wenham, . . .	158	97	91	Wilmington, . . .	124	75	49	Westborough, . . .	367	215	152
West Newbury, . . .	235	107	128	Winchester, . . .	259	112	147	West Boylston, . . .	269	221	48
50 Towns, . . .	20,804	10,755	10,049	Woburn, . . .	568	427	141	West Brookfield, . . .	226	158	68
COUNTY OF MIDDLESEX.				COUNTY OF WORCESTER.				58 Towns, . . .	20,786	13,453	7,333
Acton, . . .	256	197	59	Ashburnham, . . .	338	220	118	COUNTY OF HAMPSHIRE.
Ashby, . . .	330	92	138	Athol, . . .	370	217	153	Amherst, . . .	501	180	321
Ashland, . . .	185	83	102	Auburn, . . .	125	102	23	Belchertown, . . .	411	244	167
Bedford, . . .	166	135	31	Barre, . . .	535	253	282	Chesherfield, . . .	231	141	90
Billerica, . . .	283	144	145	Berlin, . . .	130	101	29	Cumington, . . .	272	138	134
Boxborough, . . .	72	44	28	Blackstone, . . .	332	242	90	Easthampton, . . .	205	93	112
Brighton, . . .	215	14	201	Bolton, . . .	218	117	101	Enfield, . . .	163	84	129
Burlington, . . .	77	66	11	Boylston, . . .	129	90	39	Goshen, . . .	121	27	94
Cambridge, . . .	1,659	551	1,108	Brookfield, . . .	307	235	72	Granby, . . .	155	28	127
Carlisle, . . .	103	72	31	Charlton, . . .	354	300	54	Greenwich, . . .	158	105	53
Charlestown, . . .	1,783	686	1,097	Clinton, . . .	364	184	180	Hatfield, . . .	194	83	111
Chelmsford, . . .	260	159	101	Dana, . . .	140	72	68	Hadley, . . .	321	57	264
				Douglas, . . .	335	214	121	Middlefield, . . .	107	44	63
				Dudley, . . .	214	157	57	Northampton, . . .	883	463	420
				Fitchburg, . . .	847	561	286	Norwich, . . .	150	93	57
				Gardner, . . .	285	199	86
				Grafton, . . .	503	307	196

ABSTRACT OF VOTES.

COUNTY OF HAMPSHIRE—CON.				COUNTY OF BERKSHIRE.				COUNTY OF BRISTOL—CON.
TOWNS.	Whole No.	For.	Against.	TOWNS.	Whole No.	For.	Against.	TOWNS.	Whole No.	For.	Against.
Pelham, . . .	138	102	36	Adams, . . .	885	439	446	New Bedford, . .	1,934	873	1,061
Plainfield, . .	141	29	112	Alford, . . .	92	68	24	Norton, . . .	266	159	107
Prescott, . . .	108	45	63	Becket, . . .	185	87	98	Pawtucket, . . .	365	215	150
South Hadley, .	275	93	182	Cheshire, . . .	218	214	4	Raynham, . . .	206	139	67
Southampton, .	257	132	125	Clarksburg, . .	61	28	33	Rehoboth, . . .	282	185	97
Ware, . . .	522	266	256	Dalton, . . .	166	118	48	Seekonk, . . .	316	220	96
Westhampton, .	136	53	83	Egremont, . . .	233	113	120	Somerset, . . .	194	113	81
Williamsburg, .	311	185	126	Florida, . . .	78	46	32	Swansey, . . .	210	117	93
Worthington, .	213	94	119	Great Barrington,	—	—	—	Taunton, . . .	1,430	601	829
23 Towns, . .	5,973	2,729	3,244	Hancock, . . .	116	65	51	Westport, . . .	244	176	68
COUNTY OF HAMPDEN.				Hinsdale, . . .	164	38	126	19 Towns, . .	9,429	5,166	4,263
Blandford, . .	284	183	101	Lanesborough, .	237	127	110	COUNTY OF PLYMOUTH.
Brimfield, . .	245	139	106	Lee, . . .	526	250	276	Abington, . . .	826	562	264
Chester, . . .	248	132	116	Lenox, . . .	279	169	110	Bridgewater, . .	458	206	252
Chicopee, . . .	824	367	467	Monterey, . . .	145	105	40	Carver, . . .	208	96	112
Granville, . . .	239	147	92	Mount Washington,	36	30	6	Duxbury, . . .	438	271	167
Holland, . . .	42	—	42	New Ashford, . .	43	30	13	East Bridgewater,	469	254	215
Holyoke, . . .	336	196	140	New Marlborough,	310	170	140	Halifax, . . .	134	81	53
Longmeadow, . .	188	77	111	Otis, . . .	192	109	83	Hanover, . . .	234	165	69
Ludlow, . . .	207	121	86	Peru, . . .	96	34	62	Hanson, . . .	73	39	34
Monson, . . .	374	202	172	Pittsfield, . . .	875	435	440	Hingham, . . .	609	233	376
Montgomery, . .	83	76	7	Richmond, . . .	117	97	20	Hull, . . .	17	2	15
Palmer, . . .	427	239	188	Sandisfield, . .	246	153	93	Kingston, . . .	239	132	107
Russell, . . .	92	76	16	Savoy, . . .	179	154	24	Marion, . . .	—	—	—
Southwick, . . .	212	153	59	Sheffield, . . .	348	198	150	Marshfield, . .	207	119	88
Springfield, . .	1,659	862	797	Stockbridge, . .	310	180	130	Middleborough,	715	437	278
Tolland, . . .	101	68	43	Tyringham, . . .	119	74	45	North Bridgewater,	771	395	376
Wales, . . .	82	47	35	Washington, . .	87	50	37	Pembroke, . . .	228	122	106
Westfield, . . .	772	512	260	West Stockbridge,	200	89	111	Plymouth, . . .	830	450	380
West Springfield,	473	197	276	Williamstown, .	398	232	166	Plympton, . . .	166	52	114
Wilbraham, . .	320	212	108	Windsor, . . .	177	104	73	Rochester, . . .	441	203	238
20 Towns, . .	7,208	3,986	3,222	31 Towns, . . .	7,117	4,006	3,111	Scituate, . . .	242	173	69
COUNTY OF FRANKLIN.				COUNTY OF NORFOLK.				South Scituate,	244	101	143
Ashfield, . . .	271	162	109	Bellingham, . . .	168	138	30	Wareham, . . .	391	127	264
Barnardston, . .	212	118	94	Braintree, . . .	434	176	258	West Bridgewater,	281	148	133
Buckland, . . .	224	147	77	Brookline, . . .	290	87	203	23 Towns, . . .	8,221	4,368	3,853
Charlemont, . .	220	130	90	Canton, . . .	323	145	178	COUNTY OF BARNSTABLE.
Coleraine, . . .	281	136	145	Cohasset, . . .	132	43	89	Barnstable, . . .	457	285	172
Conway, . . .	386	207	179	Dedham, . . .	607	278	329	Brewster, . . .	117	64	53
Deerfield, . . .	423	233	190	Dorchester, . .	961	468	493	Chatham, . . .	134	65	69
Erving, . . .	55	49	6	Dover, . . .	93	41	52	Dennis, . . .	184	73	91
Gill, . . .	124	62	62	Foxborough, . .	306	186	120	Eastham, . . .	71	40	31
Greenfield, . . .	520	266	264	Franklin, . . .	274	162	122	Falmouth, . . .	287	71	216
Hawley, . . .	129	62	67	Medfield, . . .	112	76	36	Harwich, . . .	120	37	83
Heath, . . .	127	75	52	Medway, . . .	380	230	150	Orleans, . . .	92	16	76
Leverett, . . .	170	116	54	Milton, . . .	228	133	115	Provincetown, .	231	123	108
Leyden, . . .	118	82	36	Needham, . . .	230	145	85	Sandwich, . . .	449	191	258
Monroe, . . .	42	32	10	Quincy, . . .	623	343	280	Truro, . . .	73	28	45
Montague, . . .	240	151	89	Randolph, . . .	601	242	359	Wellfleet, . . .	98	38	60
New Salem, . .	217	126	91	Roxbury, . . .	1,273	424	849	Yarmouth, . . .	220	82	188
Northfield, . .	297	190	107	Sharon, . . .	183	111	72	13 Towns, . . .	2,613	1,063	1,450
Orange, . . .	234	131	103	Stoughton, . . .	464	249	215	COUNTY OF NANTUCKET.
Rowe, . . .	121	46	75	Walpole, . . .	300	161	139	Nantucket, . . .	683	348	335
Shelburne, . . .	241	102	139	Weymouth, . . .	810	469	351	COUNTY OF DUKES COUNTY.
Shutesbury, . .	178	141	37	West Roxbury,	308	63	245	Chilmark, . . .	78	58	20
Sunderland, . .	202	95	107	Wrentham, . . .	360	219	141	Edgartown, . . .	250	108	142
Warwick, . . .	197	128	69	23 Towns, . . .	9,480	4,569	4,911	Tisbury, . . .	174	62	112
Wendell, . . .	143	106	37	COUNTY OF BRISTOL.				3 Towns, . . .	502	228	274
Whately, . . .	256	118	138	Attleborough, . .	673	388	285
26 Towns, . .	5,628	3,201	2,427	Berkley, . . .	140	96	44
				Dartmouth, . . .	526	281	245
				Dighton, . . .	228	136	90
				Easton, . . .	414	235	179
				Fairhaven, . . .	602	335	267
				Fall River, . . .	936	526	410
				Freetown, . . .	185	136	49
				Mansfield, . . .	280	235	45

RECAPITULATION—CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

RECAPITULATION OF THE VOTE FOR CALLING A CONVENTION.

COUNTIES.	Whole Number.	For.	Against.
Suffolk,	10,857	8,977	6,890
Essex,	16,327	8,567	7,760
Middlesex,	20,804	10,755	10,049
Worcester,	20,786	13,453	7,333
Hampshire,	5,973	2,729	3,244
Hampden,	7,208	3,986	3,222
Franklin,	5,628	3,201	2,427
Berkshire,	7,117	4,008	3,111
Norfolk,	9,480	4,569	4,911
Bristol,	9,429	5,166	4,263
Plymouth,	8,221	4,368	3,853
Barnstable,	2,513	1,063	1,450
Nantucket,	683	343	335
County of Dukes County,	502	228	274
14 Counties,	125,528	66,416	59,112

CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS

*Adopted by the Convention of Delegates, assembled at Boston, on the first Wednesday of May, A. D. 1853, and submitted to the People for their Ratification, with an Address to the People of Massachusetts.

The Convention presented the following Propositions, which were submitted to the People, November 14, 1853.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

In the Year One Thousand Eight Hundred and Fifty-Three.

RESOLVES.

In the Convention of the Delegates of the people assembled in Boston, on the first Wednesday of May, in the year 1853, for the purpose of revising and amending the Constitution of this Commonwealth.

Resolved, That the revised Constitution, proposed by said Convention, be submitted to the people of the Commonwealth for their ratification and adoption, in the manner following, viz. :—

I. The Preamble; A Declaration of the Rights of the Inhabitants of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; The Frame of Government, with its Preamble and Chapters numbered One, Two, Three, Four, Five, Six, Seven, Eight, Nine, Ten, Eleven, Twelve, Thirteen, and Fourteen, entitled, respectively—General Court,—Senate,—House of Representatives,—Governor,—Lieutenant-Governor,—Council,—Secretary,—Treasurer, Attorney-General, Auditor, District-Attorney, and County Officers,—Judiciary Power,—Qualifications of Voters and Elections,—Oaths and Subscriptions,—Militia,—The University at Cambridge, the School Fund and the Encouragement of Literature,—Miscellaneous Provisions,—Revisions and Amendments of the Constitution—as a distinct Proposition, numbered “One.”

If this proposition, so submitted, shall be ratified and adopted by a majority of the legal voters of the Commonwealth, present and voting thereon, at meetings duly called, then the same shall be the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

II. The provision respecting the granting of the writ of Habeas Corpus, as a Proposition, numbered “Two.”

If this proposition be ratified and adopted, it shall be an addition to the provision respecting the Habeas Corpus.

III. The provision respecting the rights of juries in criminal trials, as a Proposition, numbered “Three.”

If this proposition be ratified and adopted, it shall be an addition to the article in the Declaration of Rights, respecting the rights of persons charged with crimes.

IV. The provision respecting claims against the Commonwealth, as a Proposition, numbered “Four.”

If this proposition be ratified and adopted, it shall be an addition to Article XI., of the Declaration of Rights.

V. The provision respecting imprisonment for debt, as a Proposition, numbered “Five.”

If this proposition be adopted, it shall be an addition to the Article in the Declaration of Rights, respecting excessive bail and fines.

VI. The provision respecting sectarian schools, as a Proposition, numbered “Six.”

If this proposition be ratified and adopted, it shall be an addition to Article IV. of Chapter XII., entitled, “The University at Cambridge, The School Fund, and The Encouragement of Literature.” If proposition numbered “One” shall not be adopted, the proposition numbered “Six,” shall be added as an amendment to the Constitution.

VII. The provision respecting corporations, as a Proposition, numbered “Seven.”

VIII. The provision respecting banks and banking, as a Proposition, numbered “Eight.”

If the Propositions numbered “Seven” and “Eight” be ratified and confirmed, they shall be added as separate articles, or if either of them be ratified and confirmed, as an article in Chapter XIII., entitled “Miscellaneous Provisions.”

If Proposition numbered “One” be not ratified and confirmed, they shall be added as amendments to the Constitution.

Resolved, That at the meetings for the election of Governor, Senators, and Representatives to the General Court, to be held on the second Monday of November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, the qualified voters of the several towns and cities shall vote by ballot upon each of the propositions aforesaid, for or against the same, which ballots shall be inclosed within sealed envelopes, according to the provisions of an Act of this Commonwealth, passed on the twenty-second day of May, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-one, and an Act passed the twentieth day of May, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-two, and no ballots not so inclosed shall be received. And said votes shall be received, sorted, counted, declared, and recorded, in open meeting, in the same manner as is by law provided in reference to votes for governor, and a true copy of the record of said votes, attested by the selectmen and town clerk of each of the several towns, and the mayor and aldermen and city clerk of each of the several cities, shall be sealed up by said electmen and mayor and aldermen; and directed to the Secretary of the Commonwealth, with a superscription expressing the purport of the contents thereof, and delivered to the sheriff of the county within fifteen days after said meetings, to be by him transmitted to the secretary's office, on or before the third Monday of December next; or, the said selectmen and mayor and aldermen shall themselves transmit the same to the secretary's office, on or before the day last aforesaid.

* Amendments adopted by the Convention, which stand as separate articles or paragraphs, are enclosed in brackets, to distinguish them from existing provisions of the Constitution. Where an amendment has been made, by adding words to an article or paragraph in the existing Constitution, the amendment is printed in Italics.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

Resolved, That the Secretary shall deliver said copies, so transmitted to him, to a Committee of this Convention, consisting of the President of the Convention, and twenty other members, to be by him designated, who shall assemble at the State House, on the third Monday of December next, and open the same, and examine and count the votes so returned; and if it shall appear that either of said propositions has been adopted by a majority of votes, then the proposition so adopted shall become and be either the whole or a portion of the Constitution of this Commonwealth, as hereinbefore provided, and the said Committee shall promulgate the results of said votes upon each of said propositions, by causing the same to be published in those newspapers in which the laws are now published; and shall also notify the Governor and Legislature, as soon as may be, of the said results; and the Governor shall forthwith make public proclamation of the fact of the adoption of either or all of said propositions, as the whole or as parts of the Constitution of this Commonwealth.

Resolved, That each of said propositions shall be considered as a whole by itself, to be adopted in the whole, or rejected in the whole. And every voter shall vote on each proposition, by its appropriate number, indicating upon his ballot the subject of the proposition, and expressing in writing or printing, opposite to each proposition, the word Yes or No; but the propositions shall all be written or printed on one ballot, in substance, as follows:—

CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

- Shall Proposition NUMBER ONE, containing the Preamble, Declaration of Rights and Frame of Government, stand as the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts? Yes or No.
- Shall Proposition NUMBER TWO, respecting the Habeas Corpus, stand as part of the Constitution? - - - - - Yes or No.
- Shall Proposition NUMBER THREE, respecting the Rights of Juries, stand as part of the Constitution? - - - - - Yes or No.
- Shall Proposition NUMBER FOUR, respecting Claims against the Commonwealth, stand as part of the Constitution? - - - - - Yes or No.
- Shall Proposition NUMBER FIVE, respecting Imprisonment for Debt, stand as part of the Constitution? - - - - - Yes or No.
- Shall Proposition NUMBER SIX, respecting Secarian Schools, stand as part of the Constitution? - - - - - Yes or No.
- Shall Proposition NUMBER SEVEN, respecting the Creation of Corporations, stand as part of the Constitution? - - - - - Yes or No.
- Shall Proposition NUMBER EIGHT, respecting the Formation of Banks, and requiring Security for Bank Bills, stand as part of the Constitution? - - - - - Yes or No.

Resolved, That a printed copy of these resolutions, with the several constitutional propositions annexed, shall be attested by the President and Secretaries of the Convention, and transmitted by them, as soon as may be, to the selectmen of each town, and the mayor and aldermen of each city, in the Commonwealth, whose duty it shall be to insert a proper article in reference to the voting upon said propositions, in the warrant calling the meetings aforesaid, on the second Monday of November next.

Proposition Number One.

CONSTITUTION,

Or Form of Government of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

PREAMBLE.

The end of the institution, maintenance, and administration of government, is to secure the existence of the body politic; to protect it; and to furnish the individuals who compose it, with the power of enjoying, in safety and tranquillity, their natural rights and the blessings of life: and whenever these great objects are not obtained, the people have a right to alter the government, and to take measures necessary for their safety, prosperity, and happiness.

The body politic is formed by a voluntary association of individuals; it is a social compact, by which the whole people covenants with each citizen, and each citizen with the whole people, that all shall be governed by certain laws for the common good. It is the duty of the people, therefore, in framing a Constitution of government, to provide for an equitable mode of making laws, as well as for an impartial interpretation, and a faithful execution of them, that every man may, at all times, find his security in them.

We, therefore, the people of Massachusetts, acknowledging, with grateful hearts, the goodness of the great Legislator of the universe, in affording us, in the course of his providence, an opportunity, deliberately and peaceably, without fraud, violence, or surprise, of entering into an original, explicit, and solemn compact with each other; and of forming a new Constitution of civil government for ourselves and posterity; and devoutly imploring his direction in so interesting a design, do agree upon, ordain, and establish, the following Declaration of Rights and Frame of Government, as the CONSTITUTION of the COMMONWEALTH of MASSACHUSETTS.

A DECLARATION

Of the Rights of the Inhabitants of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

ARTICLE 1. All men are born free and equal, and have certain natural, essential, and unalienable rights; among which may be reckoned the right of enjoying and defending their lives and liberties; that of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property; in fine, that of seeking and obtaining their safety and happiness.

ART. 2. It is the right as well as the duty of all men in society, publicly, and at stated seasons, to worship the SUPREME BEING, the great Creator and Preserver of the universe. And no subject shall be hurt, molested, or restrained, in his person, liberty, or estate, for worshipping God in the manner and season most agreeable to the dictates of his own conscience; or for his religious profession or sentiments; provided he doth not disturb the public peace, or obstruct others in their religious worship.

ART. 3. As the public worship of God, and instructions in piety, religion, and morality, promote the happiness and prosperity of a people, and the security of a republican government; therefore, the several religious societies of this Commonwealth, whether corporate or unincorporate, at any meeting legally warned and holden for that purpose, shall ever have the right to elect their pastors or religious teachers, to contract with them for their support, to raise money for erecting and repairing houses for public worship, for the maintenance of religious instruction, and for the payment of necessary expenses: And all persons belonging to any religious society shall be taken and held to be members, until they shall file with the clerk of such society a written notice declaring the dissolution of their membership, and thenceforth shall not be liable for any grant or contract which may be thereafter made or entered into by such society: And all religious sects and denominations, demeaning themselves peaceably, and as good citizens of the Commonwealth, shall be equally under the protection of the law; and no subordination of any one sect or denomination to another shall ever be established by law.

ART. 4. The people of this Commonwealth have the sole and exclusive right of governing themselves, as a free, sovereign, and independent State; and do, and forever hereafter shall, exercise and enjoy every power, jurisdiction, and right, which is not, or may not hereafter, be by them expressly delegated to the United States of America, in Congress assembled.

ART. 5. All power residing originally in the people, and being derived from them, the several magistrates and officers of government, vested with authority, whether legislative, executive, or judicial, are their substitutes and agents, and are at all times accountable to them.

ART. 6. No man, nor corporation, nor association of men, have any other title to obtain advantages, or particular and exclusive privileges, distinct from those of the community, than what arises from the consideration of services rendered to the public; and this title being in nature neither hereditary, nor transmissible to children, or descendants, or relations by blood, the idea of a man being born a magistrate, lawgiver, or judge, is absurd and unnatural.

ART. 7. Government is instituted for the common good; for the protection, safety, prosperity, and happiness of the people; and not for the profit, honor, or private interest of any one man, family, or class of men: Therefore the people alone have an incontestible, unalienable, and indefeasible right to institute government; and to reform, alter, or totally change the same, when their protection, safety, prosperity, and happiness require it.

ART. 8. In order to prevent those, who are vested with authority, from becoming oppressors, the people have a right, at such periods, and in such manner as they shall establish by their frame of government, to cause their public officers to return to private life; and to fill up vacant places by certain and regular elections and appointments.

ART. 9. All elections ought to be free; and all the inhabitants of this Commonwealth, having such qualifications as they shall establish by their frame of government, have an equal right to elect officers, and to be elected, for public employments.

ART. 10. Each individual of the society has a right to be protected by it in the enjoyment of his life, liberty, and property, according to standing laws. He is obliged, consequently, to contribute his share to the expense of this protection; to give his personal service, or an equivalent, when necessary: but no part of the property of any individual can, with justice, be taken from him, or applied to public uses, without his own consent, or that of the representative body of the people. In fine, the people of this Commonwealth are not controllable by any other laws, than those to which their constitutional representative body have given their consent. And whenever the public exigencies require that the property of any individual should be appropriated to public uses, he shall receive a reasonable compensation therefor.

ART. 11. Every subject of the Commonwealth ought to find a certain remedy, by having recourse to the laws, for all injuries or wrongs which he may receive in his person, property, or character. He ought to obtain right and justice freely, and without being obliged to purchase it; completely, and without any denial; promptly, and without delay; conformably to the laws.

ART. 12. The privilege and benefit of the writ of habeas corpus shall be enjoyed, in this Commonwealth, in the most free, easy, cheap, expeditious, and ample manner; and shall not be suspended by the Legislature, except upon the most urgent and pressing occasions, and for a limited time not exceeding twelve months.

ART. 13. No subject shall be held to answer for any crimes or offence, until the same is fully and plainly, substantially and formally, described to him; or be compelled to accuse, or furnish evidence against himself: and every subject shall have a right to produce all proofs, that may be favorable to him; to meet the witnesses against him face to face, and to be fully heard in his defence by himself or his counsel, at his election: and no subject shall be arrested, imprisoned, despoiled, or deprived of his property, immunities, or privileges, put out of the protection of the law, exiled, or deprived of his life, liberty, or estate, but by the judgment of his peers, or the law of the land. And the legislature shall not make any law that shall subject any person to a capital or infamous punishment, excepting for the government of the army and navy, without trial by jury.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

ART. 14. In criminal prosecutions, the verification of facts in the vicinity where they happen, is one of the greatest securities of the life, liberty and property of the citizen.

ART. 15. Every subject has a right to be secure from all unreasonable searches and seizures of his person, his houses, his papers, and all his possessions. All warrants, therefore, are contrary to this right, if the cause or foundation of them be not previously supported by oath or affirmation; and if the order in the warrant to a civil officer, to make search in suspected places, or to arrest one or more suspected persons, or to seize their property, be not accompanied with a special designation of the persons or objects of search, arrest, or seizure; and no warrant ought to be issued but in cases, and with the formalities, prescribed by the laws.

ART. 16. In all controversies concerning property, and in all suits between two or more persons, except in cases in which it has heretofore been otherwise used and practised, the parties have a right to a trial by jury; and this method of procedure shall be held sacred, unless, in causes arising on the high seas, and such as relate to mariners' wages, the Legislature shall hereafter find it necessary to alter it.

ART. 17. The liberty of the press is essential to the security of freedom in a state: it ought not, therefore, to be restrained in this Commonwealth.

ART. 18. The people have a right to keep and to bear arms for the common defence: and, as in time of peace, armies are dangerous to liberty, they ought not to be maintained without the consent of the Legislature; and the military power shall always be held in an exact subordination to the civil authority, and be governed by it.

ART. 19. A frequent recurrence to the fundamental principles of the Constitution, and a constant adherence to those of piety, justice, moderation, temperance, industry, and frugality, are absolutely necessary to preserve the advantages of liberty, and to maintain a free government. The people ought, consequently, to have a particular attention to all those principles, in the choice of their officers and representatives; and they have a right to require of their lawgivers and magistrates, an exact and constant observance of them, in the formation and execution of the laws necessary for the good administration of the Commonwealth.

ART. 20. The people have a right, in an orderly and peaceable manner, to assemble to consult upon the common good; give instructions to their representatives; and to request of the legislative body, by the way of addresses, petitions, or remonstrances, redress of the wrongs done them, and of the grievances they suffer.

ART. 21. The power of suspending the laws, or the execution of the laws, ought never to be exercised but by the Legislature, or by authority derived from it, to be exercised in such particular cases only as the Legislature shall expressly provide for.

ART. 22. The freedom of deliberation, speech and debate, in either House of the Legislature, is so essential to the rights of the people, that it cannot be the foundation of any accusation or prosecution, action or complaint, in any other court or place whatsoever.

ART. 23. The Legislature ought frequently to assemble for the redress of grievances, for correcting, strengthening, and confirming the laws, and for making new laws, as the common good may require.

ART. 24. No subsidy, charge, tax, impost, or duties, ought to be established, fixed, laid, or levied, under any pretext whatsoever, without the consent of the people, or their representatives in the Legislature.

ART. 25. Laws made to punish for actions done before the existence of such laws, and which have not been declared crimes by preceding laws, are unjust, oppressive, and inconsistent with the fundamental principles of a free government.

ART. 26. No subject ought, in any case, or in any time, to be declared guilty of treason or felony by the Legislature.

ART. 27. No magistrate or court of law shall demand excessive bail or sureties, impose excessive fines, or inflict cruel or unusual punishments.

ART. 28. In time of peace, no soldier ought to be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner; and in time of war, such quarters ought not to be made but by the civil magistrate, in a manner ordained by the Legislature.

ART. 29. No person can in any case be subjected to law martial, or to any penalties or pains, by virtue of that law, except those employed in the army or navy, and except the militia in actual service, but by authority of the Legislature.

ART. 30. It is essential to the preservation of the rights of every individual, his life, liberty, property and character, that there be an impartial interpretation of the laws, and administration of justice. It is the right of every citizen to be tried by judges as free, impartial and independent, as the lot of humanity will admit. It is therefore not only the best policy, but for the security of the rights of the people, and of every citizen, that the Judges of the Supreme Judicial Court should hold their offices by tenures established by the Constitution, and should have honorable salaries, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

ART. 31. In the government of this Commonwealth, the legislative department shall never exercise the executive and judicial powers, or either of them: the executive shall never exercise the legislative and judicial power, or either of them: the judicial shall never exercise the legislative and executive powers or either of them: to the end it may be a government of laws and not of men.

THE FRAME OF GOVERNMENT.

THE people inhabiting the territory formerly called the Province of Massachusetts Bay, do hereby solemnly and mutually agree with each other, to form themselves into a free, sovereign and independent body politic or state, by the name of THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

CHAPTER I.

General Court.

ARTICLE I. The department of legislation shall be styled the General Court of Massachusetts. It shall consist of two branches, a Senate and a House of Representatives, each of which shall have a negative upon the other.

ART. 2. The political year shall begin on the first Wednesday in January; and the General Court shall assemble every year on the said first Wednesday in January, and shall be dissolved on the day next preceding the first Wednesday in January following, without any proclamation or other act of the governor. But nothing herein contained shall prevent the General Court from assembling at such other times as they shall judge necessary, or when called together by the governor.

[ART. 3. The compensation of members of the General Court shall be established by standing laws; but no act increasing the compensation shall apply to the General Court which passes such act; and no compensation shall be allowed for attendance of members at any one session for a longer time than one hundred days.]

ART. 4. No bill or resolve of the Senate or House of Representatives shall become a law, and have force as such, until it shall have been laid before the governor for his revision; and if he, upon such revision, approve thereof, he shall signify his approbation by signing the same. But if he have any objection to the passing of such bill or resolve, he shall return the same, together with his objections thereto, in writing, to the Senate or House of Representatives, in whichever the same shall have originated; who shall enter the objections sent down by the governor, at large, on their records, and proceed to reconsider the said bill or resolve: but if, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of the said Senate or House of Representatives, present, shall, notwithstanding the said objections, agree to pass the same, it shall, together with the objections, be sent to the other branch of the Legislature, where it shall also be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of the members present, shall have the force of a law: but, in all such cases, the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays; and the names of the persons voting for, or against, the said bill or resolve, shall be entered upon the public records of the Commonwealth.

And in order to prevent unnecessary delays, if any bill or resolve shall not be returned by the governor, within five days after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall have the force of a law.

But if any bill or resolve shall be objected to and not approved by the governor, and if the General Court shall adjourn within five days after the same shall have been laid before the governor for his approbation, and thereby prevent his returning it, with his objections, as provided by the Constitution, such bill or resolve shall not become a law, nor have force as such.

ART. 5. The General Court shall forever have full power and authority to erect and constitute judicatories and courts of record, or other courts, to be held in the name of the Commonwealth, for the hearing, trying, and determining of all manner of crimes, offences, pleas, processes, plaints, actions, matters, causes and things, whatsoever, arising or happening within the Commonwealth, or between or concerning persons inhabiting, or residing, or brought within the same; whether the same be criminal or civil, or whether the said crimes be capital or not capital, and whether the said pleas be real, personal or mixt; and for the awarding and making out of execution thereupon: to which courts and judicatories are hereby given and granted full power and authority, from time to time, to administer oaths or affirmations, for the better discovery of truth in any matter in controversy, or depending before them.

[ART. 6. The General Court shall have power to make laws regulating marriage, divorce and alimony, but shall in no case decree a divorce, or hear and determine any causes touching the validity of the marriage contract.]

ART. 7. And further, full power and authority are hereby given and granted to the said General Court, from time to time, to make, ordain, and establish, all manner of wholesome and reasonable orders, laws, statutes, and ordinances, directions and instructions, either with penalties or without; so as the same be not repugnant or contrary to this Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of this Commonwealth, and for the government and ordering thereof, and of the subjects of the same, and for the necessary support and defence of the government thereof; and to name and settle annually, or provide, by fixed laws, for the naming and settling all civil officers within the said Commonwealth, the election and constitution of whom are not hereafter in this form of government otherwise provided for; and to set forth the several duties, powers and limits, of the several civil and military officers of this Commonwealth, and the forms of such oaths or affirmations as shall be respectively administered unto them for the execution of their several offices and places, so as the same be not repugnant or contrary to this Constitution; and to impose and levy proportional and reasonable assessments, rates, and taxes, upon all the inhabitants of, and persons resident, and estates lying, within the said Commonwealth; and also to impose, and levy, reasonable duties and excises upon any produce, goods, wares, merchandise, and commodities, whatsoever, brought into, produced, manufactured, or being within the same; to be issued and disposed of by warrant, under the hand of the governor of this Commonwealth for the time being, with the advice and consent of the Council, for the public service, in the necessary defence and support of the government of the said Commonwealth, and the protection and preservation of the subjects thereof, according to such acts as are or shall be in force within the same.]

CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

ART. 8. The General Court shall have full power and authority to erect and constitute municipal or city governments in any corporate town or towns in this Commonwealth, and to grant to the inhabitants thereof such power, privileges and immunities, not repugnant to the Constitution, as the General Court shall deem necessary or expedient for the regulation and government thereof, and to prescribe the manner of calling and holding public meetings of the inhabitants in wards, or otherwise, for the election of officers under the Constitution, and the manner of returning the votes given at such meetings: provided, that no such government shall be erected or constituted in any town not containing twelve thousand inhabitants; nor unless it be with the consent and on the application of a majority of the inhabitants of such town, present and voting thereon, pursuant to a vote at a meeting duly warned and holden for that purpose: and provided, also, that all by-laws, made by such municipal or city government, shall be subject, at all times, to be annulled by the General Court.

ART. 9. Each branch of the General Court shall have authority to punish, by imprisonment, every person, not one of its members, who shall be guilty of disrespect thereto, by any disorderly or contemptuous behavior, in its presence; or who, in the town or city where the General Court is sitting, and during the time of its sitting, shall threaten harm to the body or estate of any of its members; or assault any of them for anything said or done in its session; or shall assault, or arrest, any witness, or other person, ordered to attend it, in his way in going, or returning; or who shall rescue any person arrested by its order: provided, that no imprisonment, on its warrant or order, for either of the above described offences, shall be for a term exceeding thirty days; and the governor and Council shall have the same authority to punish in like cases. And no member, during his going to, returning from, or attending, the General Court, shall be arrested, or held to bail, on mesne process.

ART. 10. Each branch of the General Court may try, and determine all cases where their rights and privileges are concerned, and which, by the Constitution, they have authority to try and determine, by committees of their own members, or in such other way as they may respectively think best.

ART. 11. Each branch shall be the final judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications, of its members, as pointed out in the Constitution; shall choose a presiding officer from among its members; appoint its other officers; and settle its rules and orders of proceeding; and shall have power to adjourn, provided, such adjournment shall not exceed three days at a time.

ART. 12. And whereas the elections appointed to be made by this Constitution, on the first Wednesday in January annually, by the two Houses of the Legislature, may not be completed on that day, the said elections may be adjourned from day to day until the same shall be completed.

[ART. 13. In all elections by the General Court, or either branch thereof, a majority of votes shall be required, and the members shall vote visa voce.]

ART. 14. The enacting style, in making and passing all acts, statutes and laws, shall be: BE IT ENACTED BY THE GENERAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS.

CHAPTER II.

Senate.

[ARTICLE 1. There shall be annually elected by the inhabitants of this Commonwealth, qualified as in this Constitution is provided, forty persons to be senators, for the year ensuing their election; and the Senate shall be the first branch of the General Court. For this purpose, the General Court, holden next after the adoption of this Constitution, and next after each decennial census thereafter, shall divide the Commonwealth into forty districts, composed of contiguous territory, and as nearly equal in population as may be: provided, that no town or ward of a city be divided therefor. Each district shall be entitled to elect one senator, who shall have an inhabitant of this Commonwealth for five years immediately preceding his election, and at the time of his election shall be an inhabitant of the district for which he is chosen.]

ART. 2. There shall be a meeting on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, annually, forever, of the inhabitants of each town and city in this Commonwealth, to be called and warned in due course of law, at least seven days before the day of such meeting, for the purpose of electing senators; and at such meetings every qualified voter shall have a right to give in his vote for a senator for the district of which he is an inhabitant.

The selectmen of the several towns shall preside at the town meetings impartially; and shall receive the votes of all the inhabitants of such towns present and qualified to vote for a senator, and shall sort and count them in open town meeting, and in presence of the town clerk, who shall make a fair record, in presence of the selectmen, and, in open town meeting, of the name of every person voted for, and of the number of votes against his name; and a fair copy of this record shall be attested by the selectmen and the town clerk, and shall be sealed up, directed to the Secretary of the Commonwealth for the time being, with a superscription expressing the purport of the contents thereof, and delivered by the town clerk of said towns to the sheriff of the county in which such town lies, thirty days at least before the first Wednesday in January annually; or it shall be delivered into the Secretary's office seventeen days at least before the said first Wednesday in January; and the sheriff of each county shall deliver all such certificates, by him received, into the Secretary's office, seventeen days before the said first Wednesday in January.

And the inhabitants of plantations unincorporated, qualified as this Constitution provides, shall have the same privilege of voting for a senator, in the plantations where they reside, as town inhabitants have in their respective towns; and the plantation meetings for that purpose shall be held annually on the same Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, at such place in the plantations respectively as the assessors thereof shall direct; which assessors shall have like authority for notifying the voters, collecting and returning the votes, as the selectmen and town clerks have in their several towns, by this Constitution. And all other persons living in places unincorporated, (qualified as aforesaid,) shall have the privilege of giving in their votes for a senator, in the town where the inhabitants of such unincorporated places shall be assessed, and be notified of the place of meeting by the selectmen of the said town for that purpose, accordingly.

[ART. 3. The Governor and Council shall, as soon as may be, examine the returned copies of the record provided for in article second of this chapter, and ascertain who shall have received the largest number of votes in each of the several senatorial districts, and the person who has so received the largest number of votes in each of said districts shall be a senator for the following political year; and the governor shall cause each of said persons, so appearing to be elected, to be notified at least fourteen days before the first Wednesday in January of each year, to attend on that day, and take his seat accordingly.

ART. 4. Not less than twenty-one members shall constitute a quorum for doing business; but a less number may organize, adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members.]

ART. 5. The Senate shall be a court with full authority to hear and determine all impeachments made by the House of Representatives against any officer or officers of the Commonwealth, for misconduct and maladministration in their offices; but, previous to the trial of every impeachment, the members of the Senate shall respectively be sworn, truly and impartially to try and determine the charge in question, according to evidence. Their judgment, however, shall not extend farther than to removal from office and disqualification to hold or enjoy any place of honor, trust, or profit, under this Commonwealth: but the party so convicted, shall be, nevertheless, liable to indictment, trial, judgment and punishment, according to the laws of the land.

CHAPTER III.

House of Representatives.

ARTICLE 1. There shall be, in the legislature of this Commonwealth, a representation of the people, annually elected, and founded upon the principle of equality.

ART. 2. And in order to provide for a representation of the citizens of this Commonwealth, founded upon the principle of equality, every corporate town containing [less than one thousand inhabitants, may elect one representative in the year when the valuation of estates shall be settled, and, in addition thereto, one representative five years in every ten years. Every town containing one thousand inhabitants and less than four thousand, may elect one representative. Every town containing four thousand inhabitants and less than eight thousand, may elect two representatives. Every town containing eight thousand inhabitants and less than twelve thousand, may elect three representatives. Every city or town containing twelve thousand inhabitants, may elect four representatives. Every city or town containing over twelve thousand inhabitants, may elect one additional representative for every four thousand inhabitants it shall contain over twelve thousand. Any two towns, each containing less than one thousand inhabitants, may, by consent of a majority of the legal voters present at a legal meeting, in each of said towns respectively, called for that purpose, form themselves into a representative district, to continue for the term of not less than two years; and such district shall have all the rights, in regard to representation, which belong to a town having one thousand inhabitants. And this apportionment shall be based upon the census of the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty, until a new census shall be taken.

ART. 3. The Senate at its first session after this Constitution shall have been adopted, and at its first session after the next State census shall have been taken, and at its first session next after each decennial State census thereafter, shall apportion the number of representatives to which each town and city shall be entitled, and shall cause the same to be seasonably published; and in all apportionments after the first, the numbers which shall entitle any town or city, to two, three, four, or more representatives, shall be increased or diminished in the same proportion as the population of the whole Commonwealth shall have increased or decreased since the last preceding apportionment.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

ART. 4. No town hereafter incorporated, containing less than fifteen hundred inhabitants, shall be entitled to choose a representative.

ART. 5. Each city in this Commonwealth, shall be divided, by such means as the Legislature may provide, into districts of contiguous territory, as nearly equal in population as may be, for the election of representatives, which districts shall not be changed oftener than once in five years: provided, however, that no one district shall be entitled to elect more than three representatives.]

ART. 6. The members of the House of Representatives shall be chosen on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, annually; but meetings may be adjourned, if necessary, for the choice of representatives, to the next day, and again to the next succeeding day, but no farther: but in case a second meeting shall be necessary for the choice of representatives, such meetings shall be held on the fourth Monday of the same month of November.

ART. 7. The House of Representatives shall have power, from time to time, to impose fines upon such towns as shall neglect to choose and return members to the same, agreeably to this Constitution.

ART. 8. Every member of the House of Representatives shall have been for one year, at least, next preceding his election, an inhabitant of the town he shall be chosen to represent.

ART. 9. The House of Representatives shall be the grand inquest of this Commonwealth; and all impeachments made by them shall be heard and tried by the Senate.

ART. 10. All money bills shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills.

ART. 11. Not less than one hundred members of the House of Representatives shall constitute a quorum for doing business.

CHAPTER IV. Governor.

ARTICLE 1. There shall be a supreme executive magistrate, who shall be styled, THE GOVERNOR OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

ART. 2. The governor shall be a citizen of Massachusetts, and shall be chosen annually, by the inhabitants of the towns and cities of this Commonwealth, on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November. He shall hold his office for one year next following the first Wednesday of January, and until another is chosen and qualified in his stead. And no person shall be eligible to this office, unless, at the time of his election, he shall have been an inhabitant of this Commonwealth for seven years next preceding.

ART. 3. Those persons who shall be qualified to vote for senators and representatives, within the several towns of this Commonwealth, shall, at a meeting to be called for that purpose, on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, annually, give in their votes for a governor, to the selectmen, who shall preside at such meeting, and the town clerk, in the presence and with the assistance of the selectmen, shall, in open town meeting, sort and count the votes, and form a list of the persons voted for, with the number of votes for each person against his name; and shall make a fair record of the same in the town books, and a public declaration thereof in the said meeting; and shall, in the presence of the inhabitants, seal up copies of the said list, attested by him and the selectmen, and transmit the same to the sheriff of the county, thirty days at least before the first Wednesday in January; and the sheriff shall transmit the same to the secretary's office seventeen days at least before the said first Wednesday in January; or the selectmen may cause returns of the same to be made to the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth seventeen days at least before the said day; and the secretary shall lay the same before the Senate and the House of Representatives, on the first Wednesday in January, to be by them examined; and in case of an election, the choice shall be by them declared and published.

ART. 4. The governor shall have authority, from time to time, at his discretion, to assemble and call together the councillors of this Commonwealth for the time being; and the governor, with the said councillors, or five of them at least, shall, and may, from time to time, hold and keep a Council, for the ordering and directing the affairs of the Commonwealth, agreeably to the Constitution and the laws of the land.

ART. 5. The governor, with advice of Council, shall have full power and authority, during the session of the General Court, to adjourn or prorogue the same to any time the two Houses shall desire; and in the recess of the said Court, to prorogue the same from time to time, not exceeding ninety days in any one recess; and to call it together sooner than the time to which it may be adjourned or prorogued, if the welfare of the Commonwealth shall require the same; and in case of any infectious distemper prevailing in the place where the said Court is next, at any time to convene, or any other cause happening, whereby danger may arise to the health or lives of the members from their attendance, he may direct the session to be held at some other, the most convenient place within the State.

ART. 6. In cases of disagreement between the two Houses, with regard to the necessity, expediency or time of adjournment, or prorogation, the governor, with advice of the Council, shall have a right to adjourn or prorogue the General Court, not exceeding ninety days, as he shall determine the public good shall require.

ART. 7. The power of pardoning offences, except such as persons may be convicted of before the Senate, by an impeachment of the House, shall be in the governor, by and with the advice of Council; but no charter of pardon, granted by the governor, with advice of the Council, before conviction, shall avail the party pleading the same, notwithstanding any general or particular expressions contained therein, descriptive of the offence or offences intended to be pardoned.

ART. 8. Notaries public shall be appointed by the governor, in the same manner as judicial officers are appointed, and shall hold their offices during seven years, unless sooner removed by the governor, with the consent of the Council, upon the address of both Houses of the General Court.

ART. 9. Coroners shall be nominated and appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Council; and every such nomination shall be made by the governor, and made at least seven days prior to such appointment.

ART. 10. No moneys shall be issued out of the treasury of this Commonwealth and disposed of, (except such sums as may be appropriated for the redemption of bills of credit or treasurer's notes, or for the payment of interest arising thereon,) but by warrant under the hand of the governor for the time being, with the advice and consent of the Council, for the necessary defence and support of the Commonwealth; and for the protection and preservation of the inhabitants thereof, agreeably to the acts and resolves of the General Court.

ART. 11. All public boards, the commissary-general, all superintending officers of public magazines and stores, belonging to this Commonwealth, and all commanding officers of forts and garrisons within the same, shall, once in every three months, officially and without requisition, and at other times, when required by the governor, deliver to him an account of all goods, stores, provisions, ammunition, cannon with their appendages, and small arms with their accoutrements, and of all other public property whatever under their care, respectively; distinguishing the quantity, number, quality and kind of each, as particularly as may be; together with the condition of such forts and garrisons; and the said commanding officer shall exhibit to the governor, when required by him, true and exact plans of such forts, and of the land and sea, or harbor or harbors, adjacent.

And the said boards, and all public officers, shall communicate to the governor, as soon as may be after receiving the same, all letters, despatches, and intelligences of a public nature, which shall be directed to them respectively.

ART. 12. As the public good requires that the governor should not be under the undue influence of any of the members of the General Court, by a dependence on them for his support—that he should, in all cases, act with freedom for the benefit of the public—that he should not have his attention necessarily diverted from that object to his private concerns—and that he should maintain the dignity of the Commonwealth in the character of its chief magistrate—it is necessary that he should have an honorable stated salary, of a fixed and permanent value, amply sufficient for those purposes, and established by standing laws: and it shall be among the first acts of the General Court, after the commencement of this Constitution, to establish such salary by law accordingly.

CHAPTER V. Lieutenant-Governor.

ARTICLE 1. There shall be annually elected a Lieutenant-Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, who shall be qualified in the same manner with the governor; and the day and manner of his election, the qualifications of the voters, the return of the votes, and the declaration of the election, shall be the same as in the election of a governor.

[And the lieutenant-governor shall hold his office for one year next following the first Wednesday of January, and until another is chosen and qualified in his stead.]

ART. 2. The governor, and in his absence, the lieutenant-governor, shall be president of the Council, but shall have no vote in Council; and the lieutenant-governor shall always be a member of the Council, except when the chair of the governor shall be vacant.

ART. 3. Whenever, by reason of sickness or absence from the Commonwealth, or otherwise, the governor shall be unable to perform his official duties, the lieutenant-governor, for the time being, shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, and perform all the duties of governor; and whenever the chair of the governor shall be vacant, by reason of his resignation, death, or removal from office, the lieutenant-governor shall be governor of the Commonwealth.

CHAPTER VI. Council.

ARTICLE 1. There shall be a Council for advising the governor in the executive part of the government, to consist of eight persons besides the lieutenant-governor, whom the governor for the time being, shall have full power and authority, from time to time, at his discretion, to assemble and call together; and the governor, with the said councillors, or five of them at least, shall and may, from time to time, hold and keep a Council, for the ordering and directing the affairs of the Commonwealth, according to the laws of the land.

[ART. 2. Eight councillors shall be annually chosen by the people; and for that purpose the State shall be divided by the General Court into eight districts, each district to consist of five contiguous senatorial districts; and entitled to elect one councillor, who shall hold his office for one year next following the first Wednesday in January, and until a successor is chosen and qualified in his stead.]

CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

ART. 3. No person shall be elected a councillor who has not been an inhabitant of this Commonwealth for the term of five years immediately preceding his election.

[ART. 4. The day and manner of the election of councillors, the qualifications of the voters, the return of the votes, and the declaration of the elections, shall be the same as are required in the election of senators; and the person having the highest number of votes shall be declared to be elected.]

ART. 5. No councillor, during the time for which he is elected, shall be appointed on any commission or to any place and receive compensation therefor.]

ART. 6. The councillors, in the civil arrangements of the Commonwealth, shall have rank next after the lieutenant-governor.

ART. 7. The resolutions and advice of the Council shall be recorded in a register, and signed by the members present; and any member of the Council may insert his opinion contrary to the resolution of the majority. This record shall always be subject to public examination, and may be called for by either House of the Legislature.

ART. 8. Whenever the office of the governor and lieutenant-governor shall be vacant, by reason of death, absence, or otherwise, then the Council, or the major part of them, shall, during such vacancy, have full power and authority, to do, and execute all and every such acts, matters and things, as the governor or the lieutenant-governor might or could, by virtue of this Constitution, do or execute, if they, or either of them, were personally present.

CHAPTER VII.

Secretary, Treasurer, Attorney-General, Auditor, District-Attorney, and County Officers.

[ARTICLE 1. The secretary, treasurer, auditor and attorney-general, shall be chosen by the people, annually on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November; and they shall hold their offices, respectively, for one year next following the first Wednesday in the succeeding January, and until their successors are chosen and qualified in their stead.]

The day and manner of their election, the qualifications of the voters, the return of the votes, and the declaration of the elections, shall be the same as are required in the election of governor.]

ART. 2. No man shall be eligible as treasurer, more than five years successively.

ART. 3. The records of the Commonwealth shall be kept in the office of the secretary, who may appoint his deputies, for whose conduct he shall be accountable; and he shall attend the governor and Council, the Senate and House of Representatives, in person, or by his deputies, as they shall respectively require.

[ART. 4. Judges of probate, registers of probate, sheriffs, clerks of the courts, commissioners of insolvency, district-attorneys, registers of deeds, county treasurers, and county commissioners, shall be elected triennially by the people of their respective counties and districts, on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, and shall hold their offices, respectively, for three years next following the first Wednesday in the succeeding January, and until their respective successors are chosen and qualified in their stead.]

The manner of their election, the qualifications of the voters, the return of the votes, and the declaration of the elections, shall be the same as are required in the election of senators; and the person having the highest number of votes shall be elected.]

CHAPTER VIII.

Judiciary Power.

[ARTICLE 1. The judicial power of the Commonwealth shall be vested in a Supreme Judicial Court, and such other courts as the legislature may from time to time establish.]

ART. 2. The tenure that all commission officers shall by law have in their offices, shall be expressed in their respective commissions.

All judicial officers, duly appointed, commissioned and sworn, shall hold their offices for the term of ten years, excepting such concerning whom there is different provision made in this Constitution. And upon the expiration of such term they may be reappointed; and all judicial officers for whose appointment a different provision is not made in this Constitution, shall be nominated and appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Council, and they may be removed by the governor, with consent of the Council, upon the address of both Houses of the Legislature.

[ART. 3. The present justices of the Supreme Judicial Court shall hold their offices according to their respective commissions; and the present justices of the Court of Common Pleas shall hold their offices by the same tenure, while the law establishing the said Court of Common Pleas shall continue. All nominations of judicial officers, whose term of office is by this Constitution limited to ten years, shall be publicly announced at least seven days before their appointment; and no person who shall have been commissioned after the tenth day of August, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, shall hold by any longer tenure of office than the term of ten years.]

ART. 4. Neither the governor and Council, nor the two branches of the Legislature, or either of them, shall hereafter propose questions to justices of the Supreme Judicial Court, and require their opinions thereon.]

ART. 5. The judges of probate of wills, and for granting letters of administration, shall hold their courts at such place or places, on fixed days, as the convenience of the people shall require; and the Legislature shall from time to time, hereafter, appoint such times and places; until which appointments, the said courts shall be holden at the times and places which the respective judges shall direct.

[ART. 6. Justices of the peace, justices of the peace and quorum, justices of the peace throughout the Commonwealth, and commissioners to qualify civil officers, may be appointed by the governor and Council for a term of seven years; and upon the expiration of any commission, the same may be renewed; and those now in office shall continue therein according to the tenure of their respective commissions: provided, that the jurisdiction of the justices named in this article, shall not extend to the hearing or trial of any causes, or the issuing of warrants in criminal cases.]

ART. 7. Trial justices shall be elected by the legal voters of the several towns and cities, where, at the time of such election there is no Police Court established by law, who shall hold their offices for a term of three years, and have the same jurisdiction, powers, and duties, as are now exercised by justices of the peace, or such as may hereafter be established by law. Every city or town, authorized as herein provided, shall elect a trial justice, and may elect one additional for each two thousand inhabitants therein, according to the next preceding decennial census: provided, however, that any trial justice who shall remove from the city or town in which he was elected shall thereby vacate his office.

ART. 8. Justices and clerks of the Police Courts of the several cities and towns of the Commonwealth shall be elected by the legal voters thereof, respectively, for a term of three years.]

CHAPTER IX.

Qualifications of Voters, and Elections.

ARTICLE 1. Every male citizen, of twenty-one years of age and upwards, (excepting paupers and persons under guardianship,) who shall have resided within the Commonwealth one year, and within the town or district, in which he may claim a right to vote, six calendar months next preceding any election of any national officer, or any State officer required by this Constitution to be elected by the people, shall have a right to vote in such election; and no other person shall have such right.

[ART. 2. All ballots required by law to be given at any national, state, county, district, or city election, including elections for representatives and trial justices, justices and clerks of Police Courts, shall be deposited in sealed envelopes of uniform size and appearance, to be furnished by the Commonwealth.]

ART. 3. Lists of the names of qualified voters shall be used at all elections required by this Constitution. They shall be made out and used in such manner as shall be by law provided. The presiding officers at such elections shall receive the votes of all persons whose names are borne on such lists, and shall not be held answerable for refusing the votes of any persons whose names are not borne thereon.

ART. 4. All meetings for the choice of national, state, county, or district officers, including representatives, trial justices, clerks and justices of Police Courts, by the people, shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, annually; and they shall be called by the mayor and aldermen of the cities, and the selectmen of the towns, and warned in due course of law. The manner of calling and holding public meetings in cities, for the election of officers under this Constitution, and the manner of returning the votes given at such meetings, shall be as now prescribed, or as shall hereafter be prescribed by the Legislature.

ART. 5. A majority of all the votes given shall be necessary to the election of governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary, treasurer, auditor, and attorney-general, of the Commonwealth, until otherwise provided by law, but no such law providing that such officers, or either of them, or representatives to the General Court, shall be elected by plurality, instead of a majority of votes given, shall take effect until one year after its passage; and if at any time after any such law shall have taken effect, it shall be repealed, such repeal shall not become a law until one year after the passage of the repealing act; and in the absence of any such law, if at any election of either of the above-named officers, except the representatives to the General Court, no person shall have a majority of the votes given, the House of Representatives shall elect two out of three persons then eligible, who had the highest number of votes, if so many shall have been voted for, and return the persons so elected to the Senate, from whom the Senate shall choose one who shall be the officer thus to be elected.

ART. 6. A majority of votes shall be required in all elections of representatives to the General Court, until otherwise provided by law.

ART. 7. In the election of all city or town officers, such rule of election shall govern as the Legislature may by law prescribe.

ART. 8. In all elections of councillors and senators, and in all elections of county or district officers, the person having the highest number of votes shall be elected.

ART. 9. Whenever, in any election where the person having the highest number of votes may be elected, there is a failure of election because two persons have an equal number of votes, subsequent trials may be had at such times as may be prescribed by the Legislature.]

CHAPTER X.

Oaths and Subscriptions; Incompatibility of and Exclusion from Offices; Continuation of Officers; Commissions; Writs; Confirmation of Laws.

ARTICLE 1. The following oath shall be taken and subscribed by every person chosen or appointed to any office, civil or military, under the government of the Commonwealth, before he shall enter upon the duties of his office, to wit:—

CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

"I, A. B., do solemnly swear that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and will support the Constitution thereof; and that I will faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties incumbent on me as [here insert the office], according to the best of my abilities and understanding, agreeably to the Constitution and laws of the Commonwealth. So help me God."

[Provided, that when any person, chosen or appointed as aforesaid, shall be conscientiously scrupulous of taking and subscribing an oath, and shall for that reason decline taking the above oath, he shall make and subscribe his affirmation in the foregoing form, omitting the word "swear," and substituting the word "affirm;" and omitting the words "So help me God," and substituting instead thereof the words "And this I do under the pains and penalties of perjury."]

And the said oaths or affirmations shall be taken and subscribed, by the governor and lieutenant-governor before the president of the Senate, in presence of the two Houses in convention; and by councillors before the president of the Senate and in presence of the Senate; and by the senators and representatives before the governor and Council for the time being; and by the residue of the officers aforesaid before such persons, and in such manner, as shall from time to time be prescribed by law.

ART. 2. No governor, lieutenant-governor, or judge of the Supreme Judicial Court or Court of Common Pleas, shall hold any other office under the authority of this Commonwealth, except such as by this Constitution they are admitted to hold, saving that the judges of the said courts may hold the offices of justices of the peace through the State; nor shall they hold any other office, or receive any pension or salary from any other State, or government, or power whatever, except that they may be appointed to take depositions, or acknowledgments of deeds, or other legal instruments, by the authority of other States or countries.

[No person shall hold or exercise at the same time more than one of the following offices, to wit: the office of governor, lieutenant-governor, senator, representative, judge of the Supreme Judicial Court, or Court of Common Pleas, secretary of the Commonwealth, attorney-general, treasurer, auditor, councillor, judge of probate, register of probate, register of deeds, sheriff or his deputy, clerk of the Supreme Judicial Court, or Court of Common Pleas, clerk of the Senate or House of Representatives; and any person holding either of the above offices shall be deemed to have vacated the same by accepting a seat in the congress of the United States, or any office under the authority of the United States, the office of postmaster excepted. And no person shall be capable of holding at the same time more than two offices, which are held by appointment of the governor, or governor and Council, or the Senate, or the House of Representatives, military offices, and the offices of justices of the peace, justices of the peace and quorum, notaries public, and commissioners to qualify civil officers, excepted.]

ART. 3. And no person shall ever be admitted to hold a seat in the legislature, or any office of trust or importance under the government of this Commonwealth, who shall, in the due course of law, have been convicted of bribery or corruption, in obtaining an election or appointment.

ART. 4. All commissions shall be in the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, signed by the governor, and attested by the secretary or his deputy, and have the great seal of the Commonwealth affixed thereto.

ART. 5. All writs, issuing out of the clerk's office in any of the courts of law, shall be in the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; they shall be under the seal of the court from whence they issue, and be signed by the clerk of such court.

ART. 6. All the laws, which have heretofore been adopted, used, and approved in the Province, Colony, State or Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and usually practised on in the courts of law, shall still remain and be in full force, until altered or repealed by the legislature; such parts only excepted as are repugnant to the rights and liberties contained in this Constitution.

CHAPTER XI.

Militia.

ARTICLE 1. The governor shall be the commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the Commonwealth, and of the Militia thereof, excepting when these forces shall be actually in the service of the United States; and shall have power to call out any part of the military force to aid in the execution of the laws, to suppress insurrection, and to repel invasion.

[ART. 2. All citizens of this Commonwealth liable to military service, except such as may by law be exempted, shall be enrolled in the militia, and held to perform such military duty as by law may be required.]

ART. 3. The militia may be divided into convenient divisions, brigades, regiments, squadrons, battalions, and companies; and officers with appropriate rank and titles may be elected to command the same. And the discipline of the militia shall be made to conform, as nearly as practicable, to the discipline of the army of the United States.

ART. 4. The governor shall appoint an adjutant-general, a quartermaster-general, and such other general staff-officers as shall be designated by law; who shall be commissioned by him for the term of one year, and until their successors shall be commissioned and qualified. And the adjutant-general and quartermaster-general shall have salaries fixed by law, which shall be in full for all services rendered by them in their several offices.

ART. 5. The major-generals shall be elected by the votes of the brigadier-generals and field-officers of the brigades, regiments, squadrons, and battalions of the respective divisions.

ART. 6. The brigadier-generals shall be elected by the votes of the field-officers of the regiments, squadrons, and battalions, and captains of companies, of the respective brigades.

ART. 7. The field-officers of regiments, squadrons, and battalions; shall be elected by the votes of the captains and subalterns of companies of the respective regiments, squadrons, and battalions.

ART. 8. The captains and subalterns shall be elected by the members of the respective companies.

ART. 9. All elections of military officers shall be by a majority of the written votes of those present and voting, and no person, within the description of a voter as hereinbefore specified, shall be disqualified by reason of his being a minor.

ART. 10. The Legislature shall prescribe the time and manner of convening the electors hereinbefore named, of conducting the elections, and of certifying to the governor the names of the officers elected.

ART. 11. The several officers elected shall be forthwith commissioned by the governor for the term of three years from the dates of their respective commissions, and until their successors shall be commissioned and qualified.

ART. 12. If the electors of the several officers before named shall refuse or neglect to make an election, for the space of three months after legal notice of a meeting for that purpose, the governor shall appoint and commission for three years a suitable person to fill the vacant office, with the advice of the Council if the vacancy be that of a major-general, or with the advice of the major-general of the division in which the appointment is to be made, if the vacancy be of an inferior grade.

ART. 13. Major-generals, brigadier-generals, and commanders of regiments, squadrons, and battalions, shall severally appoint such staff-officers as shall be designated by law in their respective commands.

ART. 14. All non-commissioned officers, whether of staff or company, and all musicians, shall be appointed in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

ART. 15. All officers of the militia may be removed from office by sentence of court-martial, or by such other modes as may be prescribed by law.]

CHAPTER XII.

The University at Cambridge; the School Fund; and the Encouragement of Literature.

ARTICLE 1. Whereas our wise and pious ancestors, so early as the year one thousand six hundred and thirty-six, laid the foundation of Harvard College, in which university many persons of great eminence have, by the blessing of God, been initiated in those arts and sciences which qualified them for public employments, both in church and state; and whereas the encouragement of arts and sciences, and all good literature, tends to the honor of God, the advantage of the Christian religion, and the great benefit of this, and the other United States of America—it is declared, that the President and Fellows of HARVARD COLLEGE, in their corporate capacity, and their successors in that capacity, their officers and servants, shall have, hold, use, exercise and enjoy, all the powers, authorities, rights, liberties, privileges, immunities and franchises, which they now have, or are entitled to have, hold, use, exercise and enjoy; and the same are hereby ratified and confirmed unto them, the said President and Fellows of Harvard College, and to their successors, and to their officers and servants, respectively, forever.

But the Legislature shall always have full power and authority, as may be judged needful for the advancement of learning, to grant any farther powers to the President and Fellows of Harvard College, or to alter, limit, annul, or restrain, any of the powers now vested in them: provided, the obligation of contracts shall not be impaired; and shall have the like power and authority over all corporate franchises hereafter granted, for the purposes of education, in this Commonwealth.

ART. 2. And whereas there have been, at sundry times, by divers persons, gifts, grants, devises of houses, lands, tenements, goods, chattels, legacies and conveyances, heretofore made, either to Harvard College in Cambridge, in New England, or to the President and Fellows of Harvard College, or to the said College by some other description, under several charters successively; it is declared, that all the said gifts, grants, devises, legacies and conveyances, are hereby forever confirmed unto the President and Fellows of Harvard College, and to their successors, in the capacity aforesaid, according to the true intent and meaning of the donor or donors, grantor or grantors, deviser or devisors.

ART. 3. And whereas by an Act of the General Court of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, passed in the year one thousand six hundred and forty-two, the governor and deputy-governor, for the time being, and all the magistrates of that jurisdiction, were, with the president, and a number of the clergy in the said Act described, constituted the overseers of Harvard College; and it being necessary, in this new constitution of government, to ascertain who shall be deemed successors to the said governor, deputy-governor, and magistrates; it is declared that the governor, lieutenant-governor, Council and Senate of this Commonwealth are, and shall be deemed, their successors; who, with the president of Harvard College, for the time being, together with the ministers of the congregational churches in the towns of Cambridge, Watertown, Charlestown, Boston,

CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

Roxbury, and Dorchester, mentioned in the said Act, shall be, and hereby are, vested with all the powers and authority belonging, or in any way appertaining, to the overseers of Harvard College: provided, that nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the Legislature of this Commonwealth from making such alterations in the government of the said University, as shall be conducive to its advantage, and the interest of the republic of letters, in as full a manner as might have been done by the Legislature of the late Province of the Massachusetts Bay.

[ART. 4. It shall be the duty of the Legislature, as soon as may be, to provide for the enlargement of the School Fund of the Commonwealth, until it shall amount to a sum not less than two millions of dollars; and the said fund shall be preserved inviolate, and the income thereof shall be annually appropriated for the aid and improvement of the common schools of the State, and for no other purpose.]

ART. 6. Wisdom and knowledge, as well as virtue, diffused generally among the body of the people, being necessary for the preservation of their rights and liberties; and as these depend on spreading the opportunities and advantages of education in the various parts of the country, and among the different orders of the people, it shall be the duty of Legislatures and magistrates, in all future periods of this Commonwealth, to cherish the interests of literature and the sciences, and all seminaries of them; especially the University at Cambridge, public schools, and grammar schools in the towns; to encourage private societies, and public institutions, rewards and immunities, for the promotion of agriculture, arts, sciences, commerce, trades, manufactures, and a natural history of the country; to countenance and inculcate the principles of humanity and general benevolence, public and private charity, industry and frugality, honesty and punctuality in their dealings; sincerity, good humor, and all social affections, and generous sentiments among the people.

CHAPTER XIII.

Miscellaneous Provisions.

ARTICLE 1. A census of the inhabitants of each city and town in the Commonwealth, on the first day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five, and on the first day of May of each tenth year thereafter, shall be taken and returned into the secretary's office, on or before the last day of the June following the said first day of May in each of said years; and while the public charges of government, or any part thereof, shall be assessed on polls and estates, in the manner that has hitherto been practised, in order that such assessments may be made with equality, there shall be a valuation of estates within the Commonwealth taken anew once in every ten years at least, and as much oftener as the General Court shall order.

[ART. 2. Persons holding office by election or appointment, when this Constitution takes effect, shall continue to discharge the duties thereof until their term of office shall expire, or officers authorized to perform their duties, or any part thereof, shall be elected and qualified, pursuant to the provisions of this Constitution; when all powers not reserved to them by the provisions of this Constitution shall cease; provided, however, that justices of the peace, justices of the peace and of the quorum, and commissioners of insolvency, shall be authorized to finish and complete all proceedings pending before them at the time, when their powers and duties shall cease, or be altered as aforesaid. All laws in force when this Constitution goes into effect, not inconsistent therewith, shall continue in force until amended or repealed.

ART. 3. The Legislature shall provide, from time to time, the mode in which commissions or certificates of election shall be issued to all officers elected pursuant to the Constitution, except in cases where provision is made therein.

ART. 4. The governor, by and with the consent of the Council, may at any time, for incapacity, misconduct or maladministration in their offices, remove from office, clerks of courts, commissioners of insolvency, judges and registers of probate, district attorneys, registers of deeds, county treasurers, county commissioners, sheriffs, trial justices, and justices and clerks of police courts: provided, that the cause of their removal be entered upon the records of the Council, and a copy thereof be furnished to the party to be removed, and a reasonable opportunity be given him for defence. And the governor may at any time, if the public exigency demand it, either before or after such entry and notice, suspend any of said officers, and appoint substitutes, who shall hold office until the final action upon the question of removal.

ART. 5. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in any elective office, provided for in this Constitution, except that of governor, lieutenant-governor, councillor, senator, member of the House of Representatives, and town and city officers, the governor for the time being, by and with the advice and consent of the Council, may appoint some suitable person to fill such vacancy, until the next annual election, when the same shall be filled by a new election, in the manner to be provided by law: provided, however, that trial justices shall not be deemed to be town officers for this purpose.

ART. 6. All elections provided to be had under this Constitution shall, unless otherwise provided, be first held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four.

ART. 7. This Constitution shall go into operation on the first Monday in February, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four.

ART. 8. The terms of all elective officers, not otherwise provided for in this Constitution, shall commence on the first Wednesday in January next after their election.]

ART. 9. In order to remove all doubt of the meaning of the word "inhabitant," in this Constitution, every person shall be considered as an inhabitant, for the purpose of electing and being elected into any office or place within this State, in that town, district, or plantation, where he dwelleth, or hath his home.

ART. 10. This form of government shall be enrolled on parchment, and deposited in the secretary's office, and be a part of the laws of the land; and printed copies thereof shall be prefixed to the book containing the laws of this Commonwealth, in all future editions of the said laws.

CHAPTER XIV.

Revision and Amendments of the Constitution.

[ARTICLE 1. A Convention to revise or amend this Constitution may be called and held in the following manner: At the general election in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, and in each twentieth year thereafter, the qualified voters in State elections shall give in their votes upon the question, "Shall there be a Convention to revise the Constitution?" which votes shall be received, counted, recorded, and declared, in the same manner as in the election of Governor; and a copy of the record thereof shall, within one month, be returned to the office of the Secretary of State, who shall, thereupon, examine the same, and shall officially publish the number of yeas and nays given upon said question, in each town and city, and if a majority of said votes shall be in the affirmative, it shall be deemed and taken to be the will of the people that a Convention shall meet accordingly; and, thereafter, on the first Monday of March ensuing, meetings shall be held, and delegates shall be chosen, in all the towns, cities, and districts, in the Commonwealth, in the manner and number then provided by law for the election of the largest number of representatives which the towns, cities, and districts shall then be entitled to elect in any year of that decennial period. And such delegates shall meet in Convention at the State House, on the first Wednesday of May next ensuing, and when organized, shall have all the powers necessary to execute the purpose for which such Convention was called; and may establish the compensation of its officers and members, and the expense of its session, for which the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Council, shall draw his warrant on the treasury. And if such alterations and amendments, as shall be proposed by the Convention, shall be adopted by the people voting thereon in such manner as the Convention shall direct, the Constitution shall be deemed and taken to be altered or amended accordingly. And it shall be the duty of the proper officers, and persons in authority, to perform all acts necessary to carry into effect the foregoing provisions.

ART. 2. Whenever towns or cities containing not less than one-third of the qualified voters of the Commonwealth, shall at any meeting for the election of State officers, request that a Convention be called to revise the Constitution, it shall be the duty of the legislature, at its next session, to pass an Act for the calling of the same, and submit the question to the qualified voters of the Commonwealth, whether a Convention shall be called accordingly: provided, that nothing herein contained shall impair the power of the Legislature to take action for calling a Convention, without such request, as heretofore practised in the Commonwealth.]

ART. 3. If, at any time hereafter, any specific and particular amendment or amendments to the Constitution be proposed in the General Court, and agreed to by a majority of the senators and two-thirds of the members of the House of Representatives, present and voting thereon, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered on the journals of the two Houses, with the yeas and nays taken thereon, and referred to the General Court then next to be chosen, and shall be published; and if, in the General Court next chosen, as aforesaid, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be agreed to by a majority of the senators and two-thirds of the members of the House of Representatives, present and voting thereon; then it shall be the duty of the General Court to submit such proposed amendment or amendments to the people; and if they shall be approved and ratified by a majority of the qualified voters, voting thereon, at meetings legally warned and holden for that purpose, they shall become part of the Constitution of this Commonwealth.

[ART. 4. The Legislature which shall be chosen at the general election on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five, shall divide the State into forty single districts for the choice of senators, such districts to be of contiguous territory, and as nearly equal as may be in the number of qualified voters resident in each; and shall also divide the State into single or double districts, to be of contiguous territory, and as nearly equal as may be in the number of qualified voters resident in each, for the choice of not less than two hundred and forty, nor more than three hundred and twenty representatives; with proper provisions for districting the Commonwealth as aforesaid, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six, and every tenth year thereafter; and with all other provisions necessary for carrying such system of districts into operation; and shall submit the same to the people at the general election to be held in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-six, for their ratification; and if the same shall be ratified and adopted by the people, it shall become a part of this Constitution in place of the provisions contained in this Constitution for the apportionment of senators and representatives.]

Proposition Number Two.

The writ of habeas corpus shall be granted as of right in all cases in which a discretion is not especially conferred upon the court by the Legislature; but the Legislature may prescribe forms of proceeding preliminary to the obtaining of the writ.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS — ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE.

Proposition Number Three.

In all trials for criminal offences, the jury, after having received the instruction of the court, shall have the right, in their verdict, of guilty or not guilty, to determine the law and the facts of the case, but it shall be the duty of the court to superintend the course of the trials, to decide upon the admission and rejection of evidence, and upon all questions of law raised during the trials, and upon all collateral and incidental proceedings; and also to allow bills of exceptions. And the court may grant a new trial in case of conviction.

Proposition Number Four.

Every person having a claim against the Commonwealth, ought to have a judicial remedy therefor.

Proposition Number Five.

No person shall be imprisoned for any debt hereafter contracted, unless in cases of fraud.

Proposition Number Six.

All moneys raised by taxation in the towns and cities, for the support of public schools, and all moneys which may be appropriated by the State for the support of common schools, shall be applied to and expended in no other schools than those which are conducted according to law, under the order and superintendence of the authorities of the town or city in which the money is to be expended; and such moneys shall never be appropriated to any religious sect, for the maintenance, exclusively, of its own schools.

Proposition Number Seven.

The Legislature shall not create corporations by special act when the object of the incorporation is attainable by general laws.

Proposition Number Eight.

The Legislature shall have no power to pass any act granting any special charter for banking purposes, or any special act to increase the capital stock of any chartered bank; but corporations may be formed for such purposes, or the capital stock of chartered banks may be increased, under general laws.

The Legislature shall provide by law for the registry of all notes or bills authorized by general laws to be issued or put in circulation as money; and shall require ample security for the redemption of such notes in specie.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

In Convention, August 1, 1853.

A true copy of the Resolutions adopted by the Convention and of the several Constitutional Propositions annexed. Attest:

N. P. BANKS, JR., President.

W. S. ROBINSON, }
JAS. T. ROBINSON, } Secretaries.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

In Convention, August 1, 1853.

The Committee which was directed to prepare an Address to the People of Massachusetts, ask leave to report the form of such Address.

For the Committee,

GEO. S. BOUTWELL, Chairman.

ADDRESS.

To the People of Massachusetts:—

The Convention of Delegates, assembled by your authority, and directed to revise the Constitution of the Commonwealth, has now closed its labors; and it seeks only to commend and commit the result to your consideration and final judgment. The necessity for the Convention was great, and its labors have been arduous and protracted. As your delegates, we have sought for the principles of freedom in the ancient institutions of the State; but we have thought it wise also to accept the teachings and experience of nearly a century of independent existence. It has then been our purpose to unite in one system of organic law the principles of American republican institutions, and the experiences of other free States, all contemplated in the light derived from the history and usages of Massachusetts.

And first of all, we think it proper to present for your consideration a complete system of organic law. The present Constitution was adopted in 1780, and there have since been added thirteen important amendments. By these amendments, much of the original text is already annulled, and it is only by a careful and critical analysis and comparison that the existing provisions can be determined. This ought not to be. Constitutional laws should be plain, that they may be impartially interpreted and faithfully executed—"that every man may at all times find his security in them." We have not, then, thought it wise, or even proper, to preserve, as a part of the Constitution, provisions which have long since been annulled; nor do we feel justified in proposing new specific amendments whose adoption will render the fundamental law of the Commonwealth more difficult to be understood and less certain in its requirements.

We have, therefore, taken what remains unchanged of the Constitution of 1780, and the subsequent amendments, preserving the original language wherever it appeared practicable, as the basis of a new Constitution, and incorporated therewith such of the resolutions of this Convention as are necessary to give to the whole, at once, a comprehensive and concise character. This has been our purpose; and if our view of duty is correct, we are entirely justified in submitting so much of our work as will give to the people of Massachusetts a complete system of organic law, as one proposition, for your adoption and ratification. It is undoubtedly true, that when amendments are specific and not numerous, they should be separately submitted to the judgment of the people; but this mode becomes impracticable in the formation of a new government, or the thorough revision of an old one. Our attention has been necessarily directed to every provision of the Constitution, and but one chapter is preserved in its original form. It only remained for us either to submit our work, to be added to the old Constitution as specific amendments, with the conviction that their ratification would render your form of government more complicated than it now is, or else to embody all of the old and the new that appears necessary to the safe and harmonious action of the system, and present it as The Constitution of Massachusetts.

This we now do, and we invite you to consider that, while government is essential to the safety and happiness of each individual, it must necessarily happen that it cannot be in every part alike acceptable to all. "We may not expect," said the founders of the Commonwealth, "to agree in a perfect system of government; this is not the lot of mankind. The great end of government is to promote the supreme good of human society." We commend the new Constitution to you, not as being perfect, but as greatly to be preferred to the existing frame of government. It declares the rights and liberties essential to the freedom of the people; it contains, as we believe, a framework arranged according to reason and correct analysis, and it embodies all the fundamental provisions necessary to a just administration of every department of the government.

You will naturally examine with care the character of the changes we have proposed. We have thought it necessary to make a provision for the purpose of limiting the sessions of the General Court to one hundred days, and to require that the pay of its members shall be fixed by standing laws.

At present the members of the Senate are chosen by the several counties which elect from one to six senators, upon a general ticket. We have provided for the division of the State into forty districts, of equal population, and each entitled to elect one senator.

The basis of the House of Representatives has been a subject of careful and anxious deliberation. Differences of opinion existed among us; but a majority of more than one hundred members determined to preserve the system of town representation, under which Massachusetts has existed so long and prospered so well. We have, then, based the House of Representatives upon the municipal institutions of the State, having reference, so far as practicable, to their relative population. By the proposed system, towns containing less than one thousand inhabitants are entitled to elect a representative for the year when the valuation of estates is settled, and one in addition, annually, for five years out of every decennial period. Towns having a population of one thousand and not more than four thousand inhabitants, are entitled to elect a representative every year; towns of more than four thousand and less than eight thousand, will elect two representatives; towns of eight thousand and less than twelve thousand, will elect three representatives, while towns and cities of twelve thousand inhabitants, will elect four representatives, and one additional representative for each addition of four thousand to their population. We do not claim that this system, separately considered, is precisely equal; but if it is in some degree favorable to the rural districts, the loss sustained by the large towns and cities is in a fair measure compensated by the manifest advantages accorded to them in the constitution of the Council and the Senate. The inequality of representation between particular towns, when tested solely by population, may in some cases apparently be great; but when the rights of different interests and different sections of the Commonwealth are considered in connection with the whole system of elective government, the basis of the House cannot be deemed unequal or unjust. The Senate and Council are based upon population rather than voters, by which the inhabitants of the cities and large towns have influence in these two important departments of the government quite disproportionate to their just elective power.

No human government can attain to theoretic accuracy; and in a state where pursuits, habits, and interests are various, it certainly is not the part of wisdom to place unlimited power in the hands of any. We invite you to consider that the Governor represents the voters of the State; that the Council and Senate represent population, without any reference to voters, and as a consequence, that these two departments of the government will eventually be in the control of the cities and chief towns; and finally, that we have sought only to secure to the rural districts and to the agricultural and mechanical population and interests a reasonable share of power in one branch of the Legislature. This influence gives to this portion of the people power to assent to, but never to dictate, the policy of the government. The Convention of 1780 declared that "an exact representation would be impracticable even in a system of government arising from the state of nature, and much more so in a State already divided into nearly three hundred corporations." We have encountered the same difficulty, and hope that we have overcome it in our day as well as they overcame it in their day.

ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE.

But our deliberations have not been confined to the proposed system. Many of your delegates are of opinion that the State should be divided into districts for the election of representatives, according to the number of voters in each. In this opinion a large majority of the Convention do not concur; but we think it our duty first to interpret the people's will, and then to give a fair opportunity for its expression upon all questions of importance whenever such a course is practicable. We have, therefore, made a constitutional provision that the Legislature of 1856, under the census to be taken in 1855, shall present a district system, which may be then substituted for the one recommended by the Convention, if, in the judgment of the whole people, it is wise to make the change.

We have also provided that the cities and large towns shall be so districted for the choice of representatives that no district shall be entitled to elect more than three members. In the judgment of the Convention, the election of many officers on a single general ticket, is not compatible with the freedom and purity of the representative system.

The property qualification of the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor has been abolished.

The Council has been made elective by the people in single districts, and the records of that body are hereafter to be subject to public examination.

We have provided that the Attorney-General, the Secretary of the Commonwealth, the Auditor and the Treasurer, officers now appointed by the Governor, or chosen by the Legislature, shall hereafter be elected annually by the people; and that Judges of Probate, Registers of Probate, Sheriffs, Clerks of the Courts, Commissioners of Insolvency, and District-Attorneys, officers now appointed by the Executive or the Courts, shall also be elected by the people for terms of three years.

We have also provided that the Justices of the Supreme Judicial Court and of the Court of Common Pleas, hereafter appointed, shall hold their offices for the term of ten years. In a free government, the people should be relieved in a reasonable time, and by the ordinary course of affairs, from the weight of incompetent or unfaithful public servants. Under the present Constitution a Judge can only be removed by the difficult and unpleasant process of impeachment, or of address. Such remedies will be resorted to only in the most aggravated cases. Under the proposed system we have no apprehension but that faithful and competent Judges will be retained in the public service; while those whose places can be better filled by other men, will retire to private life without violence or ungracious circumstances, and scarcely with observation.

It is proposed that Justices of the Peace shall be divided into two classes. Those whose duties are chiefly ministerial, will be, as heretofore, appointed by the Governor and Council; while those intrusted with judicial authority are to be elected by the people, and to hold by a tenure of three years.

Under the original Constitution, voters and public officers were required to possess property qualifications. These have heretofore been removed in part, and we now recommend the entire abolition of the property qualification in the voter for all national and all state officers mentioned in the Constitution. The obligations of citizens to contribute to the public expenses by assessment of taxes are not in any degree changed.

Provision is also made for the secrecy of the ballot. By the ballot the citizen at the same time declares his opinion on public affairs, and asserts his equality with every other citizen.

Freedom of opinion, and freedom in the expression of opinion, are individual rights, to be limited or controlled only by a public necessity. We see no public necessity which ought to deprive the citizen of these rights, and we have therefore made provision for their protection.

We also provide, absolutely, that in many elections, persons having the highest number of votes shall be chosen. This rule has been applied principally to the elections in counties and districts, where the trouble of frequent trials is great. The Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of the Commonwealth, Attorney-General, Treasurer, Auditor, Representatives to the General Court, and town officers, are exceptions to the rule. In case of a failure to elect either of the first six named, the election is referred to the General Court; while subsequent trials may be had for the choice of Representatives and municipal officers. We have, therefore, as we think, retained the majority rule where its application will be least burdensome to the people. At the same time we have provided that the Legislature may substitute the plurality rule whenever the public will shall demand it, with a condition that no act for that purpose shall take effect until one year after its passage. Thus we have given an opportunity to test the wisdom of the plurality system, by experience, and power to apply it to every popular election in the Commonwealth, whenever the deliberate judgment of the people shall require it.

The various provisions relating to the militia have been revised, some important changes have been made, and that department of the government will rest more firmly than ever on a constitutional basis.

Changes are proposed concerning the University at Cambridge, and the General Court is instructed to provide means for the enlargement of the School Fund, until it shall amount to a no sums less than two millions of dollars.

Although the Constitution has always asserted, in the strongest terms, the right of the people, at all times, to alter, reform, or totally change their frame of government, yet it has been contended by some, that the operation and effect of the specific provisions for amendments, contained therein, have been such as practically to impair or render doubtful this great right. We have, therefore, thought it wise, while we recognize and retain the modes of exercising this right, practised hitherto in this Commonwealth, to introduce additional provisions, to meet possible future exigencies, and to enable the people, without controversy, to hold periodical Conventions that shall not be subject to, or restricted by, any previous or subsequent act of the Legislature.

Trusting that you will examine with care the proceedings of the Convention, and the result to which it has come, we deem it unnecessary to explain several less prominent changes proposed in the Constitution of the Commonwealth.

We also submit seven distinct amendments, which are presented separately for your ratification. Some of them are new, and all of them are independent of the frame-work of the government, and may either be adopted or rejected without disturbing the system or harmony of the Constitution. They have all, however, been sustained by decisive majorities of your delegates, and embrace important and essential principles in popular government. The formation or revision of a popular Constitution is an epoch in the history of a free people.

We are sensible of the magnitude of the trust which you have confided to us, but it is not more important than the just decision of the questions which we submit to you. We have no doubt that your decision will secure a result beneficial to Massachusetts, and, under Divine Providence, will render more and more illustrious our ancient Commonwealth.

In Convention, August 1, 1853.

Read and accepted.

N. P. BANKS, Jr., President.

WM. S. ROBINSON, }
JAMES T. ROBINSON, } Secretaries.

VOTE ON THE CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

ABSTRACT

Of the Returns of Votes on the several Constitutional Propositions submitted to the People, Nov. 14, 1853, as declared by the Committee appointed by the Convention to examine same.

SUFFOLK COUNTY.

TOWNS.	No. 1.		No. 2.		No. 3.		No. 4.		No. 5.		No. 6.		No. 7.		No. 8.
	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.
Boston, - - -	3,248	9,033	3,154	8,548	3,084	8,468	3,239	8,455	3,248	8,340	3,562	8,234	3,178	8,322	3,210	8,388
Chelsea, - - -	380	483	415	448	383	480	399	466	478	440	436	432	397	466	394	469
North Chelsea, - - -	14	62	14	62	14	62	14	62	16	60	15	61	14	62	15	61
Winthrop, - - -	31	10	30	11	31	10	32	9	32	9	38	2	30	11	31	10
4 Towns, - - -	3,673	9,588	3,613	9,069	3,512	9,020	3,684	8,992	3,774	8,849	4,051	8,729	3,619	8,861	3,650	8,928

COUNTY OF ESSEX.

Amesbury, - - -	255	255	257	252	255	254	258	251	264	241	278	230	258	251	257	251
Andover, - - -	341	381	342	381	329	391	345	377	349	373	352	370	344	378	343	380
Beverly, - - -	387	423	391	420	383	428	395	419	402	410	402	411	392	419	393	418
Boxford, - - -	25	110	37	108	25	110	27	108	26	109	27	108	25	110	25	110
Bradford, - - -	96	100	96	100	94	100	94	100	93	101	94	101	94	101	94	101
Danvers, - - -	519	719	523	719	510	728	524	715	529	709	529	709	520	709	520	719
Essex, - - -	137	85	137	85	136	86	137	85	138	84	138	84	137	85	137	85
Georgetown, - - -	188	143	188	142	185	145	187	143	187	143	188	142	188	143	186	143
Gloucester, - - -	444	392	442	394	441	395	444	392	454	382	449	387	446	391	452	385
Groveland, - - -	133	101	134	100	130	103	136	99	138	97	138	97	134	101	136	100
Hamilton, - - -	75	75	77	73	74	75	77	73	76	74	76	74	76	74	76	74
Haverhill, - - -	530	497	537	491	525	503	538	489	537	490	550	478	535	494	539	489
Ipswich, - - -	237	214	233	214	228	216	234	213	229	216	234	212	234	212	235	212
Lawrence, - - -	567	622	567	624	549	640	583	607	609	580	602	587	568	621	571	617
Lynn, - - -	1,173	975	1,180	966	1,147	987	1,188	960	1,213	930	1,180	961	1,183	966	1,194	952
Lynnfield, - - -	56	42	55	43	55	43	56	42	56	42	56	42	56	42	56	42
Manchester, - - -	100	82	101	81	93	88	101	80	101	82	102	79	100	81	99	81
Marblehead, - - -	504	333	495	332	487	339	497	329	498	327	500	330	501	329	500	330
Methuen, - - -	184	195	185	195	184	197	185	195	184	195	190	191	182	197	182	197
Middleton, - - -	78	44	76	44	73	47	76	45	75	45	76	44	73	47	73	47
Nahant, - - -	5	34	5	34	4	35	5	34	5	34	5	34	5	34	6	34
Newbury, - - -	67	103	67	102	67	102	67	102	67	102	66	102	66	102	66	102
Newburyport, - - -	400	848	405	844	426	855	407	841	454	837	469	825	450	841	452	840
Rockport, - - -	226	167	225	167	220	172	225	167	227	165	228	164	223	169	224	168
Rowley, - - -	68	97	68	98	67	97	68	97	68	97	68	96	68	97	68	97
Salem, - - -	581	1,446	576	1,440	580	1,454	583	1,433	598	1,418	596	1,420	577	1,436	583	1,430
Salisbury, - - -	186	148	188	146	183	151	191	144	191	143	194	141	187	147	188	147
Saugus, - - -	137	57	137	57	134	57	137	57	136	56	137	57	137	57	137	57
Swampscott, - - -	84	45	84	45	84	45	84	45	84	45	84	45	84	45	84	45
Topsfield, - - -	32	135	33	136	33	136	32	136	31	136	33	136	32	136	32	137
Wenham, - - -	90	100	90	99	90	99	90	99	90	99	90	99	90	99	90	99
West Newbury, - - -	93	131	93	129	84	131	94	129	94	129	96	128	95	128	97	128
32 Towns, - - -	7,998	9,099	8,024	9,061	7,875	9,209	8,065	9,006	8,203	8,891	8,227	8,884	8,060	9,042	8,095	9,017

COUNTY OF MIDDLESEX.

Acton, - - -	142	81	134	80	135	80	141	81	126	93	142	81	142	77	142	77
Ashby, - - -	105	124	104	125	101	127	104	125	104	125	105	124	104	125	103	126
Ashland, - - -	119	65	118	64	108	74	119	64	119	63	118	64	112	71	117	67
Bedford, - - -	121	43	121	42	115	46	122	41	123	41	123	41	121	42	121	42
Billerica, - - -	149	147	150	144	149	145	150	143	150	143	163	130	150	143	150	143
Boxborough, - - -	55	22	55	22	52	22	55	21	55	22	55	21	55	22	55	22
Brighton, - - -	20	267	22	266	20	267	21	266	21	266	27	260	20	268	21	267
Burlington, - - -	56	16	55	16	54	17	55	16	56	15	55	16	55	16	55	16

VOTE ON THE CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

COUNTY OF MIDDLESEX—CONTINUED.

TOWNS.	No. 1.		No. 2.		No. 3.		No. 4.		No. 5.		No. 6.		No. 7.		No. 8.
	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.
Cambridge, - - -	441	1,421	462	1,404	433	1,429	479	1,385	501	1,362	521	1,346	465	1,399	463	1,398
Carlisle, - - -	74	26	74	26	73	27	74	26	75	25	75	25	74	26	74	26
Charlestown, - -	791	1,317	809	1,298	795	1,310	831	1,278	869	1,238	877	1,231	822	1,284	818	1,287
Chelmsford, - - -	122	186	125	185	103	203	125	182	128	182	174	135	124	186	126	184
Concord, - - -	172	125	179	116	151	144	180	114	175	120	182	114	174	120	173	122
Dracut, - - -	128	110	129	109	126	111	130	108	127	110	132	106	131	107	131	107
Dunstable, - - -	57	55	57	55	57	55	57	55	57	55	57	55	57	55	57	55
Framingham, - -	207	353	211	349	194	363	215	348	200	347	224	335	213	345	213	344
Groton, - - -	207	167	208	166	207	166	207	166	208	166	211	163	207	167	207	167
Holliston, - - -	237	137	237	136	230	141	240	134	234	137	239	134	235	136	236	136
Hopkinton, - - -	254	89	254	89	247	94	254	89	256	88	251	93	254	89	254	89
Lexington, - - -	128	203	128	202	127	204	129	203	131	200	131	200	128	202	128	202
Lincoln, - - -	39	66	40	65	39	66	40	65	41	64	40	65	40	65	40	65
Littleton, - - -	95	75	96	75	94	77	97	74	99	72	100	70	96	74	97	73
Lowell, - - -	2,004	2,151	2,026	2,130	1,941	2,182	2,045	2,111	2,054	2,074	2,201	1,915	2,005	2,146	2,015	2,139
Malden, - - -	242	288	250	279	236	293	256	277	249	277	259	272	245	286	249	286
Marlborough, - -	261	120	264	117	254	126	266	115	262	118	266	114	264	116	264	116
Medford, - - -	338	351	339	352	334	356	342	349	346	346	355	345	340	351	341	347
Melrose, - - -	160	85	161	84	159	86	161	84	165	81	166	80	161	84	163	84
Natick, - - -	319	276	320	275	308	282	323	274	322	271	339	267	321	271	315	280
Newton, - - -	277	425	289	422	260	441	287	415	286	416	291	412	277	424	281	420
North Reading, -	41	113	41	113	38	115	41	113	41	113	41	113	41	113	41	113
Pepperell, - - -	150	126	150	126	150	129	153	127	152	127	152	126	151	127	152	127
Reading, - - -	185	228	188	224	182	230	185	227	192	223	190	224	188	226	188	226
Sherborn, - - -	42	110	42	109	29	119	41	110	41	110	43	109	40	111	42	110
Shirley, - - -	99	113	100	112	97	115	99	112	100	111	107	105	98	114	103	109
Somerville, - - -	172	316	171	316	172	316	173	315	171	316	174	314	172	315	173	315
South Reading, -	174	227	179	223	169	233	181	222	195	208	190	214	180	224	180	223
Stoneham, - - -	296	108	293	109	288	114	299	105	299	104	301	103	297	107	298	106
Stowe, - - -	102	75	102	74	94	80	102	74	103	73	104	72	103	74	102	74
Sudbury, - - -	130	98	128	98	127	98	132	96	130	97	134	94	131	96	131	96
Tewksbury, - - -	93	93	94	93	93	93	94	93	94	93	97	88	94	93	94	93
Townsend, - - -	159	84	159	84	157	84	159	84	158	84	158	84	159	84	159	84
Tyngsborough, -	77	66	77	66	76	66	77	66	76	66	77	66	77	66	76	66
Waltham, - - -	329	366	328	365	322	371	331	364	333	357	308	376	330	365	327	367
Watertown, - - -	104	275	107	272	94	275	108	274	106	275	116	266	108	272	108	272
Wayland, - - -	107	104	108	101	104	107	108	101	108	102	108	101	107	103	106	105
West Cambridge, -	96	236	100	232	90	244	106	227	111	223	113	221	97	235	99	236
Westford, - - -	137	112	136	112	130	115	135	112	135	113	138	110	136	112	137	111
Weston, - - -	73	91	74	89	73	90	73	89	74	89	75	89	75	89	75	89
Wilmington, - -	56	61	59	60	55	61	59	60	58	60	59	58	56	61	56	61
Winchester, - - -	123	152	127	149	119	156	131	145	138	136	138	138	124	152	124	152
Woburn, - - -	274	233	274	232	266	238	279	230	283	225	280	229	276	231	275	232
51 Towns, - - -	10,339	12,178	10,453	12,052	10,027	12,383	10,571	11,955	10,637	11,822	10,982	11,514	10,432	12,067	10,455	12,054

COUNTY OF WORCESTER.

Ashburnham, - -	203	146	203	146	201	146	203	146	203	144	203	146	202	146	202	146
Athol, - - -	168	161	169	160	167	162	169	159	164	165	170	159	169	160	169	161
Auburn, - - -	119	13	120	12	120	12	120	12	120	12	120	12	120	12	120	12
Barre, - - -	266	262	266	262	261	264	266	262	261	264	267	261	266	262	267	261
Berlin, - - -	100	46	100	46	100	46	100	46	99	46	100	46	100	46	100	46
Blackstone, - -	220	171	221	170	220	171	220	171	271	169	221	169	218	121	218	171
Bolton, - - -	91	95	92	95	89	97	91	94	91	94	92	94	91	93	91	93
Boylston, - - -	94	38	94	38	92	39	94	38	94	38	94	38	94	38	94	38
Brookfield, - -	219	79	216	78	213	78	216	78	222	72	223	68	216	76	218	74
Charlton, - - -	263	41	264	41	263	41	264	41	253	52	264	40	263	42	263	42
Clinton, - - -	136	228	137	226	134	230	136	228	135	228	138	225	135	229	134	229
Dana, - - -	83	47	83	47	72	58	85	45	79	51	86	44	84	46	84	46
Douglas, - - -	208	98	208	98	207	99	208	98	209	97	210	96	208	98	208	98
Dudley, - - -	138	68	141	64	127	76	141	63	142	64	144	62	148	66	142	63
Fitchburg, - - -	554	329	547	335	534	341	551	326	548	320	545	328	541	329	540	343
Gardner, - - -	214	81	216	80	216	80	216	80	216	80	216	80	215	81	215	81
Grafton, - - -	301	173	302	172	296	178	302	172	300	174	302	172	300	174	299	175
Hardwick, - - -	137	160	139	158	136	161	140	157	140	157	140	157	138	159	140	157

VOTE ON THE CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

COUNTY OF WORCESTER—CONTINUED.

TOWNS.	No. 1.		No. 2.		No. 3.		No. 4.		No. 5.		No. 6.		No. 7.		No. 8.
	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.
Harvard, - - -	143	83	143	83	132	84	143	83	140	84	144	81	142	83	142	84
Holden, - - -	180	126	181	126	180	126	181	126	179	127	181	126	179	127	179	127
Hubbardston, - - -	240	66	240	67	236	70	239	67	238	68	239	67	239	67	239	67
Lancaster, - - -	70	170	71	168	69	170	73	168	72	167	74	164	71	163	71	168
Leicester, - - -	229	126	232	123	231	123	233	123	231	123	231	124	232	123	233	123
Leominster, - - -	306	205	305	204	301	208	305	205	307	204	309	202	307	204	308	203
Lunenburg, - - -	135	80	134	80	133	81	135	80	136	79	135	79	134	80	134	81
Mendon, - - -	155	55	154	55	141	69	154	55	145	64	158	50	154	55	153	55
Millford, - - -	368	258	366	254	347	275	367	251	365	237	358	250	364	253	364	250
Millbury, - - -	246	160	249	156	247	159	249	156	247	160	250	156	249	158	249	158
New Braintree, - - -	62	56	62	56	60	58	62	55	61	56	62	55	60	57	60	57
Northborough, - - -	165	107	165	107	165	107	165	107	158	113	165	107	165	107	165	107
Northbridge, - - -	147	155	147	155	144	155	147	155	157	143	156	127	148	154	148	154
North Brookfield, - - -	228	105	229	104	222	111	227	106	226	107	229	104	228	105	226	107
Oakham, - - -	112	48	113	47	111	50	113	47	113	47	113	47	113	47	113	47
Oxford, - - -	293	119	295	116	284	127	296	116	295	117	296	116	292	119	293	119
Paxton, - - -	112	44	112	44	104	49	112	44	111	44	115	41	112	44	112	44
Petersham, - - -	175	108	176	108	172	111	176	108	177	107	176	108	176	108	176	108
Phillipston, - - -	36	98	35	98	35	98	35	98	35	98	35	98	35	98	35	98
Princeton, - - -	142	76	142	76	138	78	142	76	141	77	142	76	142	76	142	76
Royalston, - - -	87	171	88	170	83	175	88	170	87	172	89	169	87	171	87	171
Rutland, - - -	124	26	124	26	124	26	124	26	124	26	124	26	124	26	123	26
Shrewsbury, - - -	202	80	203	80	203	80	203	80	201	81	204	79	201	82	201	82
Southborough, - - -	97	51	97	51	91	57	98	51	97	51	98	50	97	51	96	52
Southbridge, - - -	301	121	305	120	300	124	311	115	284	139	327	101	303	120	302	120
Spencer, - - -	228	187	228	187	227	189	229	187	230	187	231	186	228	188	228	188
Sterling, - - -	152	186	153	183	147	191	153	183	155	183	154	184	150	187	151	187
Sturbridge, - - -	201	109	201	107	191	116	200	109	170	134	199	110	198	111	199	111
Sutton, - - -	300	74	300	73	294	75	296	73	299	74	300	73	300	73	300	73
Templeton, - - -	222	138	224	137	212	144	225	135	218	140	227	133	224	136	223	137
Upton, - - -	225	144	226	143	224	145	227	142	230	138	229	140	227	141	227	141
Uxbridge, - - -	200	140	198	139	200	140	201	138	201	138	203	136	199	139	199	139
Warren, - - -	143	109	143	109	143	110	143	109	143	109	143	108	143	109	143	109
Webster, - - -	188	112	191	109	189	111	194	106	195	104	203	95	190	110	189	111
Westborough, - - -	219	201	228	193	214	207	230	191	227	194	234	187	222	199	222	197
West Boylston, - - -	238	66	238	66	235	69	238	66	239	65	239	65	238	66	238	66
West Brookfield, - - -	149	93	150	92	148	93	149	92	148	92	149	92	149	93	150	92
Westminster, - - -	206	154	206	154	206	154	206	154	206	153	206	153	206	153	206	153
Winchendon, - - -	213	142	216	139	216	139	218	136	214	138	217	136	214	139	214	140
Worcester, - - -	2,182	939	2,203	917	2,162	947	2,212	908	2,191	921	2,219	898	2,184	928	2,187	924
58 Towns, - - -	12,935	7,724	12,994	7,450	12,609	7,880	13,021	7,611	12,940	7,697	13,098	7,496	12,934	7,633	12,931	7,688

COUNTY OF HAMPSHIRE.

Amherst, - - -	187	271	186	270	182	271	186	270	188	267	189	278	186	271	186	271
Belchertown, - - -	223	194	223	194	222	195	223	194	222	195	223	184	223	194	223	194
Chesterfield, - - -	120	83	120	83	120	83	120	83	120	83	120	83	120	83	120	83
Cummington, - - -	132	111	132	111	132	111	132	111	133	110	133	110	132	111	132	111
Easthampton, - - -	89	111	90	110	87	113	90	110	91	109	91	109	89	111	89	111
Enfield, - - -	40	147	38	147	38	147	38	147	39	146	40	147	38	147	38	147
Goshen, - - -	34	75	34	75	34	75	34	75	34	75	34	75	34	75	34	75
Granby, - - -	53	94	53	93	48	98	53	93	54	92	54	92	52	94	52	94
Greenwich, - - -	96	61	96	61	93	61	96	61	96	61	96	61	96	61	96	61
Hatfield, - - -	83	97	83	97	80	100	81	99	83	97	83	97	83	97	83	97
Hadley, - - -	59	246	59	246	58	247	59	246	59	244	59	246	59	246	59	246
Middlefield, - - -	55	60	53	62	52	63	53	62	53	62	53	62	53	62	52	61
Northampton, - - -	443	374	444	373	423	386	443	372	442	369	446	368	444	372	444	373
Norwich, - - -	77	47	77	47	77	47	77	47	75	48	78	46	77	47	77	47
Pelham, - - -	97	47	96	47	96	46	97	47	95	48	97	47	97	47	97	47
Plainfield, - - -	88	21	76	33	35	74	78	31	88	21	90	19	39	70	38	71
Prescott, - - -	47	56	47	56	47	56	47	56	47	56	52	51	47	56	47	56
South Hadley, - - -	99	177	98	176	97	176	99	175	99	175	99	175	99	175	99	175

VOTE ON THE CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

COUNTY OF HAMPSHIRE—CONTINUED.

TOWNS.	No. 1.		No. 2.		No. 3.		No. 4.		No. 5.		No. 6.		No. 7.		No. 8.
	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.
Southampton, - -	114	107	115	106	110	110	115	106	115	106	116	105	114	107	113	107
Ware, - - -	260	230	260	228	257	233	261	228	261	228	260	228	260	229	261	228
Westhampton, - -	50	74	50	74	47	74	50	74	50	74	50	74	50	74	50	74
Williamsburg, - -	157	125	158	124	156	126	157	125	158	124	157	125	156	126	154	127
Worthington, - -	95	127	95	127	94	128	95	127	94	128	96	126	94	128	95	127
23 Towns, - -	2,698	2,935	2,683	2,940	2,585	3,020	2,684	2,939	2,696	2,918	2,726	2,908	2,642	2,983	2,639	2,983

COUNTY OF HAMPDEN.

Blandford, - -	126	82	125	82	114	88	125	82	117	83	125	82	125	82	125	83
Brimford, - -	112	119	112	119	108	122	112	119	112	119	113	118	112	119	112	119
Chester, - -	84	120	84	117	81	120	84	117	84	117	84	117	84	120	84	120
Chicopee, - -	326	397	332	390	318	403	337	388	342	391	338	387	336	390	332	393
Granville, - -	140	97	140	97	140	97	140	97	140	97	140	97	140	97	140	97
Holland, - -	40	37	40	37	40	37	40	37	40	37	40	37	40	35	40	35
Holyoke, - -	195	174	195	173	190	178	197	172	195	173	197	170	197	172	199	171
Longmeadow, - -	96	45	93	48	78	62	93	48	94	47	95	46	91	51	91	50
Ludlow, - -	128	73	128	73	128	73	128	73	128	73	128	73	128	73	129	73
Monson, - -	169	177	169	177	167	179	169	177	169	176	171	175	169	177	169	177
Montgomery, - -	63	10	63	10	63	10	63	10	63	10	63	10	63	10	63	10
Palmer, - -	250	153	249	154	240	161	251	152	248	154	253	151	252	152	252	152
Russell, - -	82	13	81	14	81	14	81	14	81	14	82	13	81	14	81	14
Southwick, - -	131	61	130	61	130	61	131	61	131	61	131	61	131	61	131	60
Springfield, - -	933	805	940	801	927	803	945	795	944	793	948	786	942	796	947	791
Tolland, - -	81	2	79	4	74	8	78	4	79	4	79	4	79	4	79	4
Wales, - -	45	63	45	63	44	64	45	63	44	61	63	40	45	63	46	63
Westfield, - -	469	220	576	214	466	221	485	207	482	207	535	157	471	220	471	219
West Springfield, - -	173	220	174	219	173	219	174	219	172	219	173	220	173	220	173	219
Wilbraham, - -	149	110	150	109	149	110	150	109	149	110	150	109	149	110	149	110
20 Towns, - -	3,792	2,978	3,805	2,962	3,711	3,030	3,828	2,944	3,814	2,946	3,908	2,853	3,808	2,966	3,813	2,960

COUNTY OF FRANKLIN.

Ashfield, - -	171	115	171	114	162	121	171	114	171	113	171	114	171	115	171	115
Barnardston, - -	103	90	105	88	103	90	106	87	103	90	107	85	105	88	105	88
Buckland, - -	165	79	166	78	161	78	165	79	167	77	165	78	165	79	166	78
Charlemont, - -	121	92	121	92	121	92	121	92	121	92	121	92	121	92	121	92
Coleraine, - -	175	161	175	161	173	161	175	161	174	161	175	161	175	161	175	161
Conway, - -	206	189	208	187	205	189	208	187	208	187	209	187	207	188	207	188
Deerfield, - -	223	190	224	190	221	192	224	190	224	190	224	190	224	190	224	191
Erving, - -	52	12	52	12	52	12	52	12	51	12	52	12	52	12	53	12
Gill, - -	46	61	46	61	46	61	46	61	44	63	46	61	46	61	47	60
Greenfield, - -	255	263	259	259	255	263	259	260	262	258	259	260	257	262	256	262
Hawley, - -	52	80	51	80	41	87	51	80	50	80	51	80	51	80	51	80
Heath, - -	72	58	71	59	69	61	71	59	71	59	71	59	72	58	72	58
Leverett, - -	112	56	112	56	111	56	111	56	111	56	111	56	112	56	112	56
Leyden, - -	78	29	78	29	77	29	77	29	77	29	77	29	77	29	77	29
Monroe, - -	25	5	25	5	20	10	25	5	25	5	25	5	25	5	25	5
Montague, - -	159	108	139	108	139	108	139	108	138	109	141	106	139	108	141	106
New Salem, - -	116	111	116	111	116	111	116	111	116	111	119	108	117	111	116	111
Northfield, - -	170	98	169	97	169	97	169	97	168	99	169	97	169	97	169	98
Orange, - -	157	120	157	120	155	122	157	120	157	120	157	120	157	120	157	120
Rowe, - -	41	68	41	68	38	71	41	68	41	68	40	68	41	68	41	68
Shelburne, - -	107	155	107	155	92	162	107	155	105	155	108	153	107	155	103	159
Shutesbury, - -	104	46	103	46	100	49	104	45	103	47	104	45	105	45	103	46
Sunderland, - -	97	101	97	100	93	101	97	100	99	98	99	98	97	99	98	99
Warwick, - -	107	66	106	66	106	66	106	66	106	66	107	65	106	66	107	65
Wendell, - -	81	26	77	28	74	29	80	26	80	26	80	26	80	26	80	26
Whately, - -	138	135	138	135	136	136	138	135	139	133	138	135	136	136	136	136
26 Towns, - -	3,133	2,514	3,114	2,505	3,035	2,554	3,116	2,503	3,111	2,504	3,126	2,490	3,112	2,507	3,113	2,509

VOTE ON THE CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

COUNTY OF BERKSHIRE.

TOWNS.	No. 1.		No. 2.		No. 3.		No. 4.		No. 5.		No. 6.		No. 7.		No. 8.
	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.
Adams, - - -	352	420	352	420	349	422	351	421	350	422	359	418	352	420	352	420
Alford, - - -	63	22	63	21	61	21	63	21	63	21	64	20	63	21	63	21
Becket, - - -	100	91	101	90	101	91	100	91	101	90	101	90	100	91	101	90
Cheshire, - - -	202	13	200	15	196	19	202	13	199	16	201	14	202	13	202	13
Clarksburg, - - -	42	20	41	21	40	22	41	21	40	22	41	21	40	22	40	22
Dalton, - - -	84	73	84	73	84	73	84	73	75	82	84	73	84	73	84	73
Egremont, - - -	106	107	106	106	106	107	106	107	106	107	106	106	106	107	106	107
Florida, - - -	46	36	46	36	45	37	46	36	46	36	46	36	46	36	45	37
Great Barrington, - - -	163	236	163	236	162	237	163	236	163	236	165	234	163	236	163	235
Hancock, - - -	62	58	62	58	61	58	62	58	62	58	62	58	62	58	62	58
Hinsdale, - - -	68	95	61	102	53	110	64	99	59	104	64	99	64	99	65	98
Lanesborough, - - -	122	96	120	97	118	97	120	97	120	97	120	96	120	97	117	97
Lee, - - -	234	271	235	270	233	273	236	269	236	269	236	269	236	269	236	269
Lenox, - - -	128	116	128	116	126	116	128	116	127	116	127	114	128	116	128	116
Monterey, - - -	95	31	95	31	94	32	95	31	95	31	94	32	95	31	94	32
Mount Washington, - - -	26	3	29	-	29	-	29	-	28	1	29	-	29	-	29	-
New Ashford, - - -	31	7	30	7	31	7	31	7	31	7	31	7	31	7	31	7
New Marlborough, - - -	118	136	119	136	113	139	119	136	117	138	119	136	120	135	121	135
Otis, - - -	91	57	90	57	89	58	90	57	90	57	90	56	90	57	90	57
Peru, - - -	28	61	28	61	25	64	27	62	29	60	28	61	28	61	26	63
Pittsfield, - - -	440	469	444	464	435	470	451	442	442	462	449	458	443	465	442	466
Richmond, - - -	70	28	69	29	69	29	69	29	69	29	69	29	69	29	69	29
Sandisfield, - - -	141	69	138	69	138	69	138	69	139	65	139	65	140	65	140	65
Savoy, - - -	160	12	160	12	159	12	160	12	157	14	161	11	160	12	160	12
Sheffield, - - -	147	114	146	115	144	117	146	115	144	117	146	115	146	115	147	114
Stockbridge, - - -	164	114	165	113	164	114	166	113	164	113	166	113	165	113	165	113
Tyringham, - - -	68	30	66	29	66	29	66	29	66	29	66	29	66	29	66	29
Washington, - - -	52	32	45	39	45	39	49	35	44	40	48	36	45	39	45	39
West Stockbridge, - - -	59	99	57	96	53	100	57	96	57	96	57	96	57	96	56	95
Williamstown, - - -	240	175	240	175	240	175	240	175	240	175	240	175	240	175	240	176
Windsor, - - -	83	70	83	68	81	70	83	68	83	67	83	68	83	68	83	68
31 Towns, - - -	3,785	3,161	3,767	3,162	3,710	3,207	3,782	3,149	3,743	3,163	3,792	3,135	3,773	3,155	3,768	3,156

COUNTY OF NORFOLK.

Bellingham, - - -	136	42	135	44	131	48	136	42	137	41	136	42	136	42	136	42
Braintree, - - -	155	243	157	243	152	245	158	240	158	240	169	230	158	241	158	241
Brookline, - - -	75	269	73	272	57	287	78	267	79	266	80	265	73	272	74	271
Canton, - - -	154	201	160	198	155	202	162	195	160	196	163	192	157	196	154	198
Cohasset, - - -	50	101	50	100	50	101	56	96	61	96	55	96	50	101	50	101
Dedham, - - -	237	416	242	407	229	419	249	401	247	444	251	397	243	407	238	409
Dorchester, - - -	410	634	417	626	403	639	425	639	433	611	439	601	415	631	414	631
Dover, - - -	36	59	36	59	36	60	43	52	36	58	43	52	36	59	36	59
Foxborough, - - -	125	148	126	147	122	147	126	147	130	143	129	143	126	147	126	147
Franklin, - - -	155	148	157	145	146	155	159	144	151	152	159	144	157	146	158	145
Medfield, - - -	49	112	50	111	40	121	50	111	50	111	52	109	49	112	48	113
Medway, - - -	215	202	218	198	209	206	222	194	213	202	229	185	216	200	215	200
Milton, - - -	97	165	101	161	95	167	102	160	102	160	109	153	99	163	97	165
Needham, - - -	117	117	117	117	113	118	117	117	117	116	117	116	117	117	117	116
Quincy, - - -	238	358	239	357	230	364	239	356	250	345	256	338	237	358	234	359
Randolph, - - -	211	444	216	439	212	443	221	436	239	418	241	416	219	438	228	435
Roxbury, - - -	434	1,085	438	1,077	428	1,083	433	1,071	451	1,001	458	996	437	1,065	438	1,077
Sharon, - - -	114	111	113	111	114	111	117	108	116	109	115	109	112	110	112	111
Stoughton, - - -	309	264	312	254	300	260	316	259	324	244	340	231	313	258	299	262
Walpole, - - -	139	208	139	208	128	215	140	207	143	205	140	208	139	208	141	209
Weymouth, - - -	391	424	400	416	380	433	401	415	417	399	410	406	399	417	400	416
West Roxbury, - - -	66	373	70	370	66	374	68	372	72	368	79	361	68	372	68	372
Wrentham, - - -	174	262	175	262	170	266	176	261	175	263	178	260	176	262	176	261
23 Towns, - - -	4,087	6,386	4,141	6,322	3,966	6,464	4,194	6,290	4,261	6,188	4,348	6,050	4,132	6,322	4,117	6,340

VOTE ON THE CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

COUNTY OF BRISTOL.

TOWNS.	No. 1.		No. 2.		No. 3.		No. 4.		No. 5.		No. 6.		No. 7.		No. 8.
	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.
Attleborough, - -	367	339	344	358	327	376	370	338	341	363	350	359	368	340	368	339
Berkley, - - -	68	48	70	45	70	46	73	44	72	43	72	44	70	46	70	46
Dartmouth, - -	240	217	240	217	240	217	240	217	240	217	240	217	240	217	240	217
Dighton, - - -	103	106	104	105	102	107	103	105	103	105	105	104	103	105	103	106
Easton, - - -	224	200	226	198	223	201	224	200	230	193	233	191	224	201	225	200
Fairhaven, - - -	310	317	309	317	308	318	310	317	310	317	310	317	310	317	310	317
Fall River, - -	566	498	571	495	570	495	570	495	566	495	538	526	568	496	567	503
Freetown, - - -	57	64	57	64	56	65	58	63	56	65	58	63	58	63	58	63
Mansfield, - - -	203	35	201	32	200	35	202	32	201	32	191	43	202	33	199	34
New Bedford, - -	1,195	1,317	1,195	1,316	1,185	1,317	1,199	1,314	1,204	1,308	1,195	1,310	1,198	1,314	1,193	1,315
Norton, - - -	156	116	160	115	159	116	160	115	158	115	158	116	159	114	159	114
Pawtucket, - - -	179	184	179	184	178	185	179	184	178	184	181	183	179	183	179	183
Raynham, - - -	149	82	149	82	145	83	148	82	146	82	149	82	149	82	149	82
Rehoboth, - - -	147	137	147	137	148	136	147	137	147	137	148	136	147	137	147	137
Seekonk, - - -	141	87	141	87	127	100	141	87	137	90	143	85	141	87	141	87
Somerset, - - -	111	134	111	134	111	134	111	134	111	134	111	134	111	134	111	134
Swansey, - - -	93	112	93	112	92	112	93	112	93	112	93	112	93	112	93	112
Taunton, - - -	549	888	549	889	531	901	552	887	544	890	544	886	547	888	546	891
Westport, - - -	151	97	153	97	154	97	154	97	151	99	154	97	153	97	153	97
19 Towns, - - -	5,009	4,978	4,999	4,984	4,926	5,041	5,034	4,960	4,988	4,981	4,973	5,005	5,020	4,966	5,011	5,977

COUNTY OF PLYMOUTH.

Abington, - - -	525	344	533	337	522	346	534	332	544	322	543	325	530	338	530	337
Bridgewater, - - -	166	296	168	295	165	298	170	293	167	296	171	293	169	294	168	295
Carver, - - -	104	120	105	119	104	119	104	119	104	119	104	119	104	119	104	119
Duxbury, - - -	246	175	246	174	246	175	247	174	247	174	249	172	248	173	248	173
East Bridgewater, - - -	260	230	260	230	260	230	264	226	263	228	263	227	262	228	264	226
Halifax, - - -	73	70	70	72	70	72	70	71	72	68	71	70	70	70	70	71
Hanover, - - -	148	80	148	79	148	79	148	78	145	81	150	77	148	79	149	78
Hanson, - - -	132	50	133	51	128	54	131	49	133	51	132	52	133	49	134	49
Hingham, - - -	207	398	209	397	207	399	209	394	212	394	209	396	209	397	208	398
Hull, - - -	7	16	7	16	7	16	7	16	7	16	7	16	7	16	7	16
Kingston, - - -	123	165	124	164	121	166	135	153	129	160	135	154	136	153	136	153
Marshfield, - - -	146	93	146	93	145	94	146	93	144	95	146	93	146	93	146	93
Middleborough, - - -	361	315	360	315	361	316	363	313	362	314	363	314	361	315	362	315
North Bridgewater, - - -	391	407	393	401	389	405	394	401	394	399	396	399	392	403	392	405
Pembroke, - - -	119	109	119	109	119	109	119	109	119	109	120	108	119	109	119	109
Plymouth, - - -	412	419	420	410	414	415	423	403	432	398	425	405	419	412	419	411
Plympton, - - -	34	115	34	115	34	115	34	115	34	115	34	115	34	115	34	115
Rochester, - - -	135	251	135	250	126	259	135	250	136	249	146	239	136	248	135	249
Scituate, - - -	166	83	166	83	165	84	166	83	163	84	166	83	166	83	166	83
South Scituate, - - -	87	191	86	191	84	193	91	186	93	187	96	182	89	189	90	187
Wareham, - - -	101	244	100	243	99	242	100	243	100	242	101	242	101	242	101	243
West Bridgewater, - - -	131	156	121	127	128	154	122	152	136	148	136	147	129	154	129	154
22 Towns, - - -	4,074	4,327	4,083	4,271	4,042	4,340	4,117	4,253	4,136	4,249	4,163	4,229	4,008	4,279	4,111	4,279

COUNTY OF BARNSTABLE.

[illegible]

VOTE ON THE CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITIONS.

COUNTY OF BARNSTABLE—CONTINUED.

TOWNS.	No. 1.		No. 2.		No. 3.		No. 4.		No. 5.		No. 6.		No. 7.		No. 8.
	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.
Orleans, - - -	54	73	54	73	54	73	54	73	54	73	54	73	54	73	54	73
Provincetown, - - -	124	132	125	131	123	133	124	131	125	131	125	131	124	132	124	132
Sandwich, - - -	157	264	158	265	158	265	158	265	158	265	159	264	158	265	158	264
Truro, - - -	84	41	85	40	85	40	85	40	85	40	85	40	84	41	84	41
Wellfleet, - - -	111	109	111	109	111	109	111	109	111	109	111	109	111	109	111	109
Yarmouth, - - -	35	148	35	148	35	148	35	147	35	147	35	147	35	147	35	147
13 Towns, - - -	1,294	1,650	1,298	1,601	1,295	1,604	1,300	1,598	1,298	1,601	1,301	1,598	1,297	1,602	1,296	1,601

COUNTY OF NANTUCKET.

Nantucket, - - -	273	394	273	393	272	395	273	394	275	392	275	392	273	394	274	393
------------------	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----

COUNTY OF DUKES COUNTY.

Chilmark, - - -	32	16	35	13	35	13	35	13	36	12	41	7	36	12	39	12
Edgartown, - - -	44	159	45	158	43	159	45	158	47	156	44	159	44	159	44	149
Tisbury, - - -	56	63	56	63	56	63	56	63	56	63	56	63	56	63	56	63
3 Towns, - - -	132	238	136	234	134	235	136	234	139	231	141	229	136	234	139	224

RECAPITULATION.

Suffolk County, - -	3,673	9,588	3,613	9,069	3,512	9,020	3,684	8,992	3,774	8,849	4,051	8,729	3,619	8,861	3,650	8,928
Essex " - -	7,998	9,099	8,024	9,061	7,875	9,209	8,065	9,006	8,203	8,891	8,227	8,884	8,060	9,042	8,095	9,017
Middlesex " - -	10,339	12,178	10,452	12,052	10,027	12,383	10,571	11,955	10,637	11,822	10,982	11,514	10,432	12,067	10,455	12,054
Worcester " - -	12,935	7,724	12,994	7,450	12,609	7,880	13,021	7,611	12,940	7,697	13,098	7,496	12,934	7,633	12,931	7,688
Hampshire " - -	2,698	2,935	2,683	2,940	2,585	3,020	2,684	2,939	2,696	2,918	2,726	2,908	2,642	2,983	2,639	2,983
Hampden " - -	3,792	2,978	3,805	2,962	3,711	3,030	3,828	2,944	3,814	2,946	3,908	2,853	3,808	2,966	3,813	2,960
Franklin " - -	3,133	2,514	3,114	2,505	3,035	2,554	3,116	2,503	3,111	2,504	3,126	2,490	3,112	2,507	3,113	2,509
Berkshire " - -	3,785	3,161	3,767	3,162	3,710	3,207	3,782	3,149	3,743	3,163	3,792	3,135	3,773	3,155	3,768	3,156
Norfolk " - -	4,087	6,386	4,141	6,322	3,966	6,464	4,194	6,290	4,261	6,188	4,348	6,050	4,132	6,322	4,117	6,340
Bristol " - -	5,009	4,978	4,999	4,984	4,926	5,041	5,034	4,960	4,988	4,981	4,973	5,005	5,020	4,966	5,011	4,977
Plymouth " - -	4,074	4,327	4,083	4,271	4,042	4,340	4,117	4,253	4,136	4,249	4,163	4,229	4,008	4,279	4,111	4,279
Barnstable " - -	1,294	1,650	1,298	1,601	1,295	1,604	1,300	1,598	1,298	1,601	1,301	1,598	1,297	1,602	1,296	1,601
Nantucket " - -	273	394	273	393	272	395	273	394	275	392	275	392	273	394	274	393
Dukes " - -	132	238	136	234	134	235	136	234	139	231	141	229	136	234	139	224
14 Counties, - -	63,222	68,150	63,382	67,006	61,699	68,382	63,805	66,828	64,015	66,432	65,111	65,512	63,246	67,011	63,412	67,109

ERRATA.

ERRATA.

Vol. I., page 276, in the Yeas and Nays on the Council, the name of George S. Boutwell should appear among the Nays, instead of the Yeas, he having voted against the proposition of the member for Manchester.

Vol. I., pages 404, 405, the list of Yeas and Nays relating to the Secretary, Treasurer, &c., were inserted before being revised by the official copy, which was corrected after the names were called. The following is correct:—

YEAS.

Adams, Shubael P.
Allen, Charles
Allis, Josiah
Alvord, D. W.
Baker, Hillel
Ballard, Alvah
Bancroft, Alpheus
Barrett, Marcus
Bates, Moses, Jr.
Beach, Erasmus D.
Beal, John
Bennett, Zephaniah
Bird, Francis W.
Bishop, Henry W.
Bliss, Gad O.
Booth, William S.
Boutwell, George S.
Boutwell, Sewell
Bradford, William J. A.
Breed, Hiram N.
Bronson, Asa
Brown, Adolphus F.
Brown, Alpheus R.
Brown, Hiram C.
Brownell, Joseph
Bryant, Patrick
Buck, Asahel
Burlingame, Anson
Carruthers, William
Chapin, Daniel E.
Chapin, Henry
Childs, Josiah
Churchill, J. McKean
Clarke, Stillman
Cleaverly, William
Coggin, Jacob
Cole, Lansing J.
Cole, Sumner
Crane, George B.
Cressy, Oliver S.
Crittenden, Simeon
Cross, Joseph W.
Cushman, Thomas
Cutler, Simeon N.
Davis, Ebenezer
Davis, Isaac
Dean, Silas
Denton, Augustus
Dunham, Bradish
Durgin, John M.
Easton, James, 2d
Eaton, Calvin D.
Eaton, Lilley
Edwards, Elisha
Fellows, James K.
Fisk, Lyman
Fiske, Emory
Foster, Aaron
Foster, Abram

Fowle, Samuel
Freeman, James M.
French, Charles A.
French, Samuel
Gale, Luther
Gates, Elbridge
Gilbert, Washington
Giles, Charles G.
Gooding, Leonard
Gourgass, F. R.
Green, Jabez
Griswold, Josiah W.
Hadley, Samuel P.
Hall, Charles B.
Hallett, B. F.
Harmon, Phineas
Haskell, George
Hathaway, Elnathan P.
Hawkes, Stephen E.
Hayden, Isaac
Heath, Ezra, 2d
Hewes, James
Hewes, William H.
Hobart, Aaron
Hobart, Henry
Hobbs, Edwin
Holder, Nathaniel
Hood, George
Hooper, Foster
Howard, Martin
Huntington, Charles P.
Huntington, George H.
Hurlbut, Moses C.
Jacobs, John
Johnson, John
Kendall, Isaac
Kingman, Joseph
Knight, Hiram
Knight, Jefferson
Knowlton, Charles L.
Knowlton, J. S. C.
Knowlton, William H.
Knox, Albert
Kuhn, George H.
Ladd, Gardner P.
Langdon, Wilber C.
Lawton, Job G., Jr.
Leland, Alden
Lincoln, Abishai
Loomis, E. Justin
Marble, William P.
Marvin, Abijah P.
Mason, Charles
Meador, Reuben
Merritt, Simeon
Moore, James M.
Morton, Elbridge G.
Morton, Marcus
Morton, Marcus, Jr.

Newman, Charles
Nichols, William
Nute, Andrew T.
Ober, Joseph E.
Oliver, Henry K.
Orne, Benjamin S.
Packer, E. Wing
Parker, Adolphus G.
Parris, Jonathan
Parsons, Samuel C.
Parsons, Thomas A.
Partridge, John
Peabody, Nathaniel
Pease, Jeremiah, Jr.
Penniman, John
Perkins, Daniel A.
Perkins, Jesse
Perkins, Noah C.
Phelps, Charles
Pierce, Henry
Pool, James M.
Rantoul, Robert
Rawson, Silas
Read, James
Richardson, Daniel
Richardson, Samuel H.
Rockwood, Joseph M.
Rogers, John
Ross, David S.
Sanderson, Amasa
Sanderson, Chester
Schouler, William
Sheldon, Luther
Sherril, John
Simonds, John W.
Smith, Matthew
Souther, John

NAYS.

Aspinwall, William
Atwood, David C.
Barrows, Joseph
Bell, Luther V.
Bradbury, Ebenezer
Brinley, Francis
Briggs, George N.
Bullock, Rufus
Bumpus, Cephas C.
Cogswell, Nathaniel
Coledge, Henry F.
Crosby, Leander
Davis, Solomon
Eames, Philip
Eustis, William T.
Fowler, Samuel P.
Gilbert, Wanton C.
Gould, Robert
Goulding, Dalton
Hale, Artemas
Hammond, A. B.
Heard, Charles
Hersey, Henry
Hinsdale, William

ABSENT.

Abbott, Alfred A.
Abbott, Josiah G.
Adams, Benjamin P.
Aldrich, P. Emory
Allen, James B.
Allen, Joel C.
Allen, Parsons

Sprague, Melzar
Spooner, Samuel W.
Stacy, Eben H.
Stevens, Granville
Stevens, Joseph L., Jr.
Stevens, William
Stiles, Gideon
Sumner, Charles
Thayer, Joseph
Thayer, Willard, 2d
Thomas, John W.
Tilton, Abraham
Tilton, Horatio W.
Turner, David
Turner, David P.
Tyler, William
Underwood, Orison
Viles, Joel
Wales, Bradford L.
Walker, Amasa
Ward, Andrew H.
Warner, Samuel, Jr.
Weston, Gershom B.
White, Benjamin
White, George
Whitney, Daniel S.
Whitney, James S.
Wilbur, Joseph
Williams, Henry
Wilson, Henry
Wilson, Willard
Winn, Jonathan B.
Winslow, Levi M.
Wood, Charles C.
Wood, Nathaniel
Wood, Otis
Wright, Ezekiel

Bartlett, Russel
Bartlett, Sidney
Bates, Eliakim A.
Beebe, James M.
Bennett, William, Jr.
Bigelow, Edward B.
Bigelow, Jacob
Blagden, George W.
Bliss, William C.
Braman, Milton P.
Brewster, Osmyn
Brown, Artemas
Brown, Hammond
Brownell, Frederick
Bullen, Amos H.
Butler, Benjamin F.
Cady, Henry
Carter, Timothy W.
Case, Isaac
Chandler, Amariah
Chapin, Chester W.
Choate, Rufus
Clark, Henry
Clark, Ransom
Clark, Salah
Clarke, Alpheus B.
Conkey, Ithamar
Cook, Charles E.
Copeland, Benjamin F.
Crockett, George W.
Crowell, Seth
Crowninshield, F. B.
Cummings, Joseph
Curtis, Wilbur
Cushman, Henry W.
Dana, Richard H., Jr.
Davis, Charles G.
Davis, John
Hapgood, Seth
Haskins, William
Hayward, George
Henry, Samuel
Heywood, Levi
Hillard, George S.
Howland, Abraham H.
Hoyt, Henry K.
Hubbard, William J.
Hunt, Charles E.
Huntington, Asahel
Hurlburt, Samuel A.
Hyde, Benjamin D.
Ide, Abijah M., Jr.
James, William
Jenkin, John
Jenks, Samuel H.
Kellogg, Martin R.
Keyes, Edward L.
Kimball, Joseph
Kinsman, Henry W.
Knight, Joseph
Lawrence, Luther
Little, Otis
Littlefield, Tristram
Lord, Otis P.
Lothrop, Samuel K.
Marcy, Leban
Marvin, Theophilus R.
Monroe, James L.
Morey, George
Morse, Joseph B.
Morton, William S.
Nash, Hiram
Nayson, Jonathan

Norton, Alfred
Osgood, Charles
Paige, James W.
Paine, Benjamin
Paine, Henry
Davis, Robert T.
Dawes, Henry L.
Day, Gilman
Dehon, William
Deming, Elijah S.
Dennison, Hiram S.
DeWitt, Alexander
Doane, James C.
Dorman, Moses
Duncan, Samuel
Earle, John M.
Easland, Peter
Edwards, Samuel
Ely, Joseph M.
Ely, Homer
Farwell, A. G.
Fay, Sullivan
Fitch, Ezekiel W.
French, Charles H.
French, Rodney
Frothingham, R'd, Jr.
Gardner, Henry J.
Gardner, Johnson
Giles, Joel
Gooch, Daniel W.
Goulding, Jason
Graves, John W.
Gray, John C.
Greene, William B.
Greenleaf, Simon
Griswold, Whiting
Hale, Nathan
Hapgood, Lyman W.
Parker, Joel
Payson, Thomas E.
Peabody, George
Perkins, Jonathan C.
Phinney, Sylvanus B.
Plunkett, William C.
Pomroy, Jeremiah
Powers, Peter
Preston, Jonathan
Prince, F. O.
Putnam, George
Putnam, John A.
Reed, Sampson
Rice, David
Richards, Luther
Richardson, Nathan
Ring, Elkanah, Jr.
Rockwell, Julius
Royce, James C.
Sampson, George R.
Sherman, Charles
Sikes, Chester
Simmons, Perez
Sleeper, John S.
Stetson, Caleb
Stevenson, J. Thomas
Storow, Charles S.
Strong, Alfred L.
Stutson, William
Sumner, Increase
Swain, Alanson
Taber, Isaac C.
Taft, Arnold
Talbot, Thomas
Taylor, Ralph

ERRATA.

Thompson, Charles
Tilston, Edmund P.
Tower, Ephraim
Train, Charles R.
Tyler, John S.
Upham, Charles W.
Upton, George B.
Vinton, George A.
Wallace, Frederick T.
Wallis, Freeland

Walker, Samuel
Warner, Marshal
Waters, Asa H.
Wetmore, Thomas
Wheeler, William F.
Wilbur, Daniel
Wilder, Joel
Wilkinson, Ezra
Williams, J. B.
Wood, William H.

Absent and not voting, 180.

Vol. II., page 373, 1st column, 16th line from the bottom, for "Mr. Otis, of Sumner," read Mr. Sumner, for Otis.

Vol. II., page 373, 2d column, 1st line, for "moderators" read monitors.

Vol. II., page 411, 1st column, 5th line from the bottom, for "Mr. Morton, of Tisbury," read Mr. Norton, of Tisbury.

Vol. II., page 429, 3d column, for "Mr. Huntington, of Northampton, moved to strike out the word 'seven,' in the fifth line, and insert in lieu thereof, the word 'ten,'" read—Mr. Huntington, of Northampton, moved to strike out the word 'seven,' in the fifth line.

Vol. II., page 593, 1st column, instead of a division upon the question of reconsidering the vote by which the resolves upon the subject of Elections by Plurality had finally passed, the Yeas and Nays were taken, and resulted—yeas, 137; nays, 48—as follows:—

YEAS.

Adams, Benjamin P.
Adams, Shubael P.
Aldrich, P. Emory
Allen, James B.
Allen, Parsons
Alvord, D. W.
Bancroft, Alpheus
Bates, Moses, Jr.
Beal, John
Bennett, Zephaniah
Bigelow, Jacob
Bird, Francis W.
Boutwell, George S.
Bradbury, Ebenezer
Breed, Hiram N.
Brinley, Francis
Briggs, George N.
Brown, Adolphus F.
Brown, Hammond
Brown, Hiram C.
Brownell, Frederick
Brownell, Joseph
Bryant, Patrick
Bullock, Rufus
Burlingame, Anson
Butler, Benjamin F.
Cady, Henry
Carruthers, William
Case, Isaac
Chapin, Chester W.
Childs, Josiah
Churchill, J. McKean
Clark, Salah
Clarke, Alpheus B.
Clevery, William
Cole, Lansing J.
Cushman, Thomas
Dana, Richard H., Jr.
Davis, Charles G.
Denning, Elijah S.
Duncan, Samuel

Dunham, Bradish
Eames, Philip
Earle, John M.
Eastland, Peter
Easton, James, 2d
Edwards, Elisha
Edwards, Samuel
Ely, Homer
Ely, Joseph M.
Fellows, James K.
Foster, Abram
Freeman, James M.
French, Charles A.
French, Rodney
Frothingham, R., Jr.
Gale, Luther
Gates, Elbridge
Gilbert, Wanton C.
Giles, Joel
Greene, William B.
Griswold, Josiah W.
Griswold, Whiting
Hale, Nathan
Hallett, B. F.
Hapgood, Lyman W.
Hagood, Seth
Harmon, Phineas
Hawkes, Stephen E.
Heath, Ezra, 2d
Hewes, James
Hillard, George S.
Hobart, Henry
Hood, George
Howland, Abraham H.
Hubbard, William J.
Hunt, William
Kellogg, Giles C.
Kendall, Isaac
Kingman, Joseph
Knight, Hiram
Knight, Joseph

Knowlton, Charles L.
Knowlton, J. S. C.
Langdon, Wilber C.
Little, Otis
Livermore, Isaac
Loomis, Justin E.
Lothrop, Samuel K.
Marvin, Abijah P.
Marvin, Theophilus R.
Mason, Charles
Merritt, Simeon
Morey, George
Morton, Elbridge G.
Morton, Marcus
Morton, Marcus, Jr.
Morton, William S.
Nayson, Jonathan
Nute, Andrew T.
Ober, Joseph E.
Oliver, Henry K.
Orcutt, Nathan
Osgood, Charles
Parker, Adolphus G.
Parker, Samuel D.
Parris, Jonathan
Partridge, John
Phinney, Silvanus B.
Pomroy, Jeremiah

Allen, Joel C.
Alley, John B.
Allis, Josiah
Baker, Hillel
Bartlett, Russel
Booth, William S.
Boutwell, Sewell
Buck, Asahel
Bumpus, Cephas C.
Clark, Ransom
Crittenden, Simeon
Dean, Silas
Denton, Augustus
Eaton, Calvin D.
Fay, Sullivan
French, Samuel
Gardner, Henry J.
Gilbert, Washington
Giles, Charles G.
Green, Jabez
Hale, Artemas
Haskins, William
Hathaway, Elnathan P.
Hinsdale, William

NAYS.

Hoyt, Henry K.
Jenkins, John
Knowlton, William H.
Knox, Albert
Ladd, Gardner P.
Lawton, Job G., Jr.
Marcy, Laban
Miller, Seth, Jr.
Penniman, John
Perkins, Daniel A.
Pierce, Henry
Rawson, Silas
Rice, David
Royce, James C.
Scherill, John
Simonds, John W.
Stiles, Gideon
Thompson, Charles
Tilton, Horatio W.
Turner, David P.
Wallace, Frederick T.
Wallis, Freeland
Wilder, Joel
Winslow, Levi M.

ABSENT.

Abbott, Alfred A.
Abbott, Josiah G.
Allen, Charles
Andrews, Robert
Appleton, William
Aspinwall, William
Atwood, David C.
Austin, George
Ayres, Samuel
Ballard, Alvah
Ball, George S.
Banks, Nathaniel
Barrows, Joseph
Bartlett, Sidney
Barrett, John
Bates, Ephraim A.
Beach, Erasmus D.
Beebe, James M.
Bell, Luther V.
Bennett, William, Jr.
Bigelow, Edward B.
Bishop, Henry W.
Blagden, George W.
Bliss, Gad O.
Bliss, William C.
Bradford, William J. A.
Braman, Milton P.
Browster, Osymon

Johnson, Asa
Brewster, Alpheus R.
Brown, Artemas
Bullen, Amos H.
Carter, Timothy W.
Chandler, Amariah
Coffin, Daniel E.
Coffin, Henry
Coffin, Rufus
Clark, Henry
Clarke, Stillman
Coggins, Jacob
Coggins, Nathaniel
Coggins, Samuel
Coggins, William
Cook, Charles E.
Coggins, Henry F.
Coppeland, Benjamin F.
Crane, George B.
Cressy, Oliver S.
Crockett, George W.
Crosby, Leander
Cross, Joseph W.
Crowell, Seth
Crowninshield, F. B.
Cummings, Joseph
Curtis, Wilber
Cushman, Henry W.

Cutler, Simeon N.
Davis, Ebenezer
Davis, Isaac
Davis, John
Davis, Robert T.
Davis, Solomon
Dawes, Henry L.
Day, Gilman
Dehon, William
Denison, Hiram S.
DeWitt, Alexander
Doane, James C.
Dorman, Moses
Durgin, John M.
Eaton, Lilley
Eustis, William T.
Farwell, A. G.
Fisk, Lyman
Fiske, Emery
Fitch, Ezekiel W.
Foster, Aaron
Fowle, Samuel
Fowler, Samuel P.
French, Charles H.
Gardner, Johnson
Goodrich, Daniel W.
Gooding, Leonard
Gould, Robert
Goulding, Dalton
Goulding, Jason
Graves, John W.
Gray, John C.
Greenleaf, Simon
Hadley, Samuel P.
Hall, Charles B.
Hammond, A. B.
Haskell, George
Hayden, Isaac
Hayward, George
Hazelwell, Charles C.
Heard, Charles
Henry, Samuel
Hersey, Henry
Hewes, William H.
Heywood, Levi
Hobart, Aaron
Hobbs, Edwin
Holder, Nathaniel
Hooper, Foster
Hopkinson, Thomas
Houghton, Samuel
Howard, Martin
Hunt, Charles E.
Huntington, Asahel
Huntington, Charles P.
Huntington, George H.
Hurlburt, Samuel A.
Hurlburt, Moses C.
Hyde, Benjamin D.
Ide, Abijah M., Jr.
Jackson, Samuel
Jacobs, John
James, William
Jenks, Samuel H.
Johnson, John
Kellogg, Martin R.
Kewes, Edward L.
Kimball, Joseph
Kinsman, Henry W.
Knight, Jefferson
Kuhn, George H.
Ladd, John S.
Lawrence, Luther
Leland, Alden
Lincoln, Abishai
Lincoln, Frederic W., Jr.
Linfield, Tristram
Lord, Otis P.
Loud, Samuel P.
Lowell, John A.
Marble, William P.
Meader, Reuben
Mixer, Samuel
Monroe, James L.
Moore, James M.
Morse, Joseph B.

Nash, Hiram
Newman, Charles
Nichols, William
Norton, Alfred
Noyes, Daniel
Orne, Benjamin S.
Packer, E. Wing
Paige, James W.
Paine, Benjamin
Paine, Henry
Park, John G.
Parker, Joel
Parsons, Samuel C.
Parsons, Thomas A.
Payson, Thomas E.
Peabody, George
Peabody, Nathaniel
Pease, Jeremiah, Jr.
Perkins, Jesse
Perkins, Jonathan C.
Perkins, Noah C.
Phelps, Charles
Plunkett, William C.
Pool, James M.
Powers, Peter
Preston, Jonathan
Prince, F. O.
Putnam, George
Putnam, John A.
Rantoul, Robert
Read, James
Reed, Sampson
Richardson, Daniel
Richardson, Nathan
Richardson, Samuel H.
Rockwell, Julius
Rogers, John
Sampson, George R.
Sanderson, Chester
Sargent, John
Sheldon, Luther
Sherman, Charles
Sikes, Chester
Sleepy, John S.
Smith, Matthew
Southern, John
Stacy, Eben H.
Stetson, Caleb
Stevens, Granville
Stevens, Joseph L., Jr.
Stevens, William
Storow, Charles S.
Stutson, William
Sumner, Charles
Taber, Isaac C.
Taft, Arnold
Talbot, Thomas
Taylor, Ralph
Thayer, Joseph
Thayer, Willard, 2d
Thomas, John W.
Tilston, Edmund P.
Tilton, Abraham
Tower, Ephraim
Turner, David
Tyler, John S.
Upham, Charles W.
Wells, Joel
Winton, George A.
Walcott, Samuel B.
Wales, Bradford L.
Walker, Samuel
Wagner, Marshal
Weeks, Cyrus
Wetmore, Thomas
Wheeler, William F.
White, George
Whitney, Daniel S.
Wilbur, Daniel
Wilbur, Joseph
Wilkins, John H.
Williams, Henry
Williams, J. B.
Wilson, Milo
Willard, Willard

ERRATA.

Winn, Jonathan B. Wood, William H.
Wood, Nathaniel Woods, Josiah B.
Wood, Otis Wright, Ezekiel

Absent and not voting, 234.

In the speech of Mr. Parker, of Cambridge, in the first volume :—

Page 75, 1st column, 43d line,
For—"whatever other law might have been,"
Read—and whatever other law may have been.

Page 76, 3d column, 7th and 8th lines from the bottom,
For—"that he regarded this Act of 1852, as the Constitution of this body," Read—that regarding this Act of 1852 as a charter, it was a contract.

Same page and column, 3d, 4th and 5th lines from the bottom,
For—"he regarded this Act of 1852, as the Constitution of this body, and that the legislature therefore had no power,"
Read—regarding this Act of 1852 as the Constitution of this body, the legislature had no power.

Page 77, 1st column, 7th, 8th and 9th lines,
For—"I understood them to be maintained by him as suggestions which had been made, and not as propositions of his own,"
Read—I understood them to be maintained by him upon suggestions which had been made, and not founded upon propositions of his own.

Same page and column, 25th and 26th lines,
For—"Then regarding it in that light, the conclusion was drawn,"
Read—Then regarding it in the light of a charter the conclusion was drawn.

Page 78, 3d column, 40th and 41st lines,
For—"But while arguing that it is a charter the gentleman forgets,"
Read—But while arguing upon it as a charter the gentleman forgot.

Same page and column, 44th line,
For—"without an incorporation,"
Read—the act of incorporation.

Same page and column, 57th and 58th lines,
For—"And now in relation to our Constitution; gentlemen say that the Act,"
Read—And now in relation to it as a Constitution; the gentleman says that if the Act.

In the next line strike out "and".

Page 78, 1st column, 26th line,
For—"I relate this anecdote to show the feeling which existed,"
Read—This anecdote was related to show the feeling of importance which existed.

And in the 29th line, read—But the reply.

Page 81, 3d column, 9th and 10th lines from the bottom,
For—"The response of the people has given a character to the law. It has affixed to it something beyond the law,"

Read—Has the response of the people given a character to the law? Has it affixed to it something different from a law?

Page 82, 1st column, last line,
For—"But let us admit that they have the power,"
Read—But the people have the power.

The reader will observe several other verbal errors in that speech more or less apparent, there having been no revision of it by the author.

In speeches of Mr. Hallett, for Wilbraham, in the first volume :—

Page 87, 2d column, 26th line,
Read—"The people have a right to make their [fundamental] laws."

Page 171, 3d column, 8th line from the bottom,
Strike out "Lord" before "Bacon."

Page 191, 1st column, 28th line,
For—"United States Constitution," Read—State Constitution.

Page 226, 3d column, 9th line,
For—"Rhode Island had a council," Read—Maryland.

Page 227, 3d column, 30th line from the bottom,
For—"The two boards separately," Read—Separated.

Page 257, 3d column, last line,
For—"line a leaf,"
Read—live a leaf in history, &c.

Page 262, 3d column, 25th line,
For—"Shone on, and shine on,"
Read—Shone on and shone on.

Page 294, 2d column, 20th line,
For—"the importation of these foreigners who come here to become citizens in a single year, add," &c.
Read—the immigration of these foreigners who come here to become citizens :—in a single year adds more solid capital, &c.

Page 473, 1st column, 2d line,
For—"doubt,"
Read—doubts.

Same page and column, 41st line,
Put a comma after "eighteen assistants."

Same page, 3d column, 10th line,
After "we hold," put a comma instead of a period.

Page 474, 1st column, 15th line,
For—"an,"
Read—and.

Same page and column, 17th line from the bottom,
Strike out "the".

Page 475, 1st column, 27th line,
For—"every,"
Read—very.

Page 476, 1st column, 13th line from the bottom,
For—"Woods,"
Read—Wood.

Same page, 2d column, 4th line,
For—"Woods,"
Read—Wood.

Same page and column, 7th line,
Strike out the comma after "upon."

Same page and column, 11th line,
Before "small towns," insert yet the.

Same page, 3d column, 28th line from the bottom,
For—"hereafter,"
Read—hereafter.

Page 478, 2d column, 13th line from the bottom,
For—"Hewitt," Read—Whevell.

Page 480, 2d column, 9th line,
Strike out "the" before idellity.

Same page, 3d column, 27th line,
For—"devour," Read—protect.

Page 473, 3d column, 16th line, add no before "danger."

In the speech of Mr. Hathaway, of Freetown, in the first volume :—

Page 41, 3d column, 13th line from the bottom,
For—"nothing," &c.
Read—but little, if anything to do, &c.

Page 42, 1st column, 6th line,
For—"I suppose that under this clause," &c.
Read—I do not suppose, &c., and at the end of the sentence, after the word "vacancy," add, but would have the right to impose a fine.

Same page and column, 15th and 16th lines,
After the word "represented" add, before issuing a precept to such town to fill the vacancy.

Same page and column, 18th and 19th lines,
After the word "resigned," add—by the acceptance of an office incompatible with the office of a representative.

Same page and column, 32d line,
Between the words "office which," insert the words, the holding of.

Same page and column, 39th and 40th lines,
For—"we have no power to do so, because,"
Read—it does not follow that we have power to do it, as.

Same page and column,
At the end of Mr. Hathaway's remarks, after the word "represented,"

Add—in the formation of an organic law for the government of the people of which such town is a part.

Mr. Hathaway's remarks are, in this matter, very imperfectly reported, probably from the cause of the difficulty of hearing in the Music Hall, where these remarks were made.

In the speech of Mr. Wilson, of Natick, in the second volume :—

Page 438, 1st column, 25th line,
For—"Governor Leonard," Read—Governor Seward.

INDEX

TO

VOLUMES I. AND II.

- ABBOTT, JOSIAH G.
Contested Seat of Delegate for Walpole, Vol. i. 53-55, 58.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 532.
House of Representatives, ii. 67, 68, 199, 614.
Judiciary, ii. 418, 425.
Memorials, i. 45.
Militia, i. 556, 567.
Motions, i. 67; ii. 457.
Plurality, i. 148, 149; ii. 388, 457.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 361, 362.
Reports from Committees, i. 47, 67, 483.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 574, 575.
Absence, leave of. Vol. i. 64, 121, 210, 264, 317, 318, 326, 512, 601; ii. 168, 411, 555, 605, 623.
- ADAMS, SHUBAEL P.
Closing Debate, Vol. i. 253; ii. 361.
Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 242-244; ii. 450.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 560.
Distribution of Books, ii. 685.
Habeas Corpus, (see Declaration of Rights.)
House of Representatives, i. 619-621, 623, 625.
Judiciary, ii. 402, 414, 419.
Limiting Debate, i. 579; ii. 361.
Motions, i. 253, 623; ii. 4, 361, 365, 377, 402, 450, 518.
New Towns, ii. 353.
Orders, i. 568.
Plurality, i. 203, 204; ii. 365, 377.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 350, 392, 393.
Address to the People. Vol. ii. 471, 700, 701.
Adjournment. Vol. i. 19-22, 63, 104, 110, 111, 128, 140, 141, 153, 232, 388, 502, 601, 630, 631; ii. 113, 214.
Adjournment, Final. Vol. ii. 335, 688.
- ALDRICH, P. EMORY.
Closing Debate, Vol. i. 338.
Distribution of Books, ii. 686.
Leave of Absence, i. 210.
Motions, i. 325.
Orders, i. 504.
Plurality, ii. 601.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 325, 354, 381-384, 577, 578; ii. 14, 16.
- ALLEN, CHARLES.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 631.
Amendments, &c., ii. 491.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 23, 37.
Census, ii. 75.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 585, 586.
Contested Seat of the Delegate for Walpole, i. 55, 58.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 526.
Frame of Government, i. 418, 420, 447, 498, 499.
House of Representatives, ii. 37, 61, 69, 90, 91, 201.
Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 561.
- Judiciary, ii. 403, 414, 415, 430, 431.
Limiting Debate, ii. 310, 377.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 655, 656.
Motions, i. 17, 217, 218, 282, 283, 337, 338, 414, 447; ii. 72, 73, 75, 310, 329, 377, 430.
Petitioning the Legislature, i. 282, 283.
Plurality, i. 135-137, 147, 148, 150, 217, 218, 224; ii. 384, 385, 394.
Reports from Committees, i. 37, 53, 104, 220, 272, 337, 413, 414; ii. 11, 72.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 545, 546.
Viva Voce Voting, i. 282.
- ALLEN, PARSONS.
Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 623.
- ALLEY, JOHN B.
Corporations, Vol. ii. 10.
House of Representatives, i. 591-593, 637; ii. 91.
Motions, i. 590.
Personal Explanation, ii. 305, 306.
- ALVORD, D. W.
Closing Debate, Vol. ii. 579.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 580, 581.
Credentials, i. 92.
Distribution of Debates, ii. 685.
House of Representatives, ii. 613, 614.
Judiciary, ii. 429.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 499-501.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 205, 207-209.
Motions, ii. 579, 580.
Orders, i. 53.
Plurality, ii. 593, 597, 598.
Question of Order, ii. 596.
- Amendment and Enrolment. Vol. i. 83; ii. 165-168, 244-250.
- An Act relating to the calling a Convention for Revising the Constitution. Vol. ii. 689.
- APPLETON, WILLIAM.
Resignation of Mr. Rogers, Vol. ii. 53.
Appendix to Debates. Vol. ii. 423, 447.
- ASPINWALL, WILLIAM.
Amendments, &c., Vol. ii. 373, 581.
Choice of Second Secretary, i. 5.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 504.
Governor, i. 167, 168.
House of Representatives, i. 479.
Limiting Debate, ii. 376, 447, 448.
Militia, i. 575, 576.
Mode of Procedure, i. 4, 17, 18.
Mode of submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 672.
Motions, i. 34, 364, 394; ii. 580.
New Towns, ii. 386, 435.
Plurality, i. 152, 158, 195, 215; ii. 382, 386.
Question of Order, ii. 588.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 551.
Rules and Orders, i. 27; ii. 337.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 366, 373, 377.
- Assignment, Special. Vol. i. 414; ii. 162, 266.
- ATWOOD, DAVID C.
Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 623.
- AUSTIN, GEORGE.
Motions, Vol. i. 176, 437.
- BALL, GEORGE S.
Encouragement of Literature, Vol. ii. 632.
Militia, i. 529.
Motions, i. 437.
Plurality, i. 126.
Question of Order, ii. 597.
Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
- Ballot, Freedom of. Vol. i. 48, 387.
- BANKS, NATHANIEL P., JR.
Address on taking the chair of the Convention, Vol. i. 4, 5.
Address on Final Adjournment, ii. 688.
Census, ii. 74.
Elected President of the Convention, i. 4.
House of Representatives, i. 625-627; ii. 620, 621.
Militia, i. 522, 523, 529, 554.
Plurality, i. 217, 219.
- Banks and Banking. Vol. i. 74, 112, 506; ii. 460, 474-484, 492-496.
- BARTLETT, SIDNEY.
Act calling the Convention, Vol. i. 17.
Amendments, &c., ii. 167.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 22, 23, 41, 43, 46, 47.
Corporations, ii. 5, 6.
Council, i. 276, 277.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 559.
Habeas Corpus, (see Declaration of Rights.)
House of Representatives, ii. 194-198.
Judiciary, ii. 416, 417, 424-428, 509.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 517, 518.
Militia, i. 566, 567.
Motions, i. 17, 22, 74.
Orders, i. 16, 18.
Place of Meeting, i. 16, 18, 19.
Rules and Orders, i. 17.
Vacancy, i. 74.
- BATES, MOSES, JR.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 22, 186.
Amendments, &c. ii. 165.
Appendix to Report of Debates, ii. 423.
Assignment of Seats, i. 67.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 23, 25, 94, 95.
Closing Debate, i. 273; ii. 285.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 566.
Corporations, ii. 347.
Council, ii. 451.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 536, 559.
Distribution of Books, ii. 536.
Distribution of Report of Debates, ii. 642, 685, 686.

INDEX.

- House of Representatives, i. 628, 639; ii. 64, 78, 617, 618.
 Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 562.
 Judiciary, ii. 285, 304, 636.
 Lieutenant-Governor, i. 277, 280.
 Motions, i. 92, 110, 153, 219, 316, 358, 413, 502, 555; ii. 162, 264, 277, 304, 536.
 New Towns, ii. 434.
 Orders, i. 6, 17, 45, 67, 112.
 Pay Roll, ii. 606.
 Per Diem of Members, i. 112.
 Place of Meeting, i. 22.
 Plurality, i. 140, 141, 219; ii. 332, 601, 604.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 290, 316, 347, 359; ii. 14, 15.
 Question of Order, ii. 347, 590, 596.
 Quorum of the House, ii. 309.
 Reports, i. 62; ii. 45, 470, 605, 636.
 Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 366, 367, 370, 371, 373, 377, 378, 394, 395, 399, 400; ii. 116, 147, 153.
 Senate, i. 104, 110.
- BEACH, ERASMUS D.
 House of Representatives, Vol. 644; ii. 111-113.
 Motions, i. 644; ii. 214.
 Loan of the State Credit, ii. 214.
- BERLIN VACANCY. Vol. i. 22-25, 46, 47, 48-51, 53, 59-62, 64-73, 74-82, 84-90, 92-97, 176.
- BIGELOW, EDWARD B.
 Corporations, Vol. ii. 347.
 New Towns, ii. 349.
- BIRD, FRANCIS W.
 Adjournment, Vol. i. 232, 289.
 Amendments, &c., ii. 166, 468, 469.
 Constitutional Conventions, ii. 468, 469, 586.
 Corporations, ii. 6, 346.
 Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 252.
 Death of Mr. Gourgas, ii. 258.
 Declaration of Rights, ii. 505, 527, 554.
 Distribution of the Amended Constitution, ii. 641.
 Distribution of the Report of Debates, ii. 641, 642.
 Encouragement of Literature, ii. 155, 157, 158.
 Frame of Government, i. 496, 497.
 Governor, i. 170.
 House of Representatives, i. 486-489, 598, 623; ii. 41.
 Imprisonment for Debt, (see Declaration of Rights.)
 Judiciary, ii. 298, 299, 426, 636.
 Lieutenant-Governor, i. 278, 280.
 Loan of the State Credit, ii. 218.
 Militia, i. 519, 520, 529-531; ii. 2.
 Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 665, 684.
 Motions, i. 82, 256, 289, 404, 437, 455, 502; ii. 109, 124, 130, 165, 304, 445, 484, 503, 563, 586.
 New Towns, ii. 435.
 Oaths and Subscriptions, i. 190; ii. 160.
 Orders, i. 92, 105; ii. 684.
 Pay Roll, ii. 44.
 Pardoning Power, i. 503, 504.
 Petitioning the Legislature, i. 283.
 Population and Representation, i. 231.
 Preservation of Records, ii. 386, 452.
 Plurality, ii. 454, 587, 593, 599, 605, 610.
 Printing of the Amended Constitution, &c., ii. 684.
 Protest of Colored Citizens, ii. 686.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 286, 364, 386.
 Quorum of the House, ii. 307-309.
 Reports from Committees, ii. 386, 636.
 Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 370, 371, 394.
 Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
 Senators in Congress, i. 398, 399.
 University at Cambridge, ii. 348, 349.
- BISHOP, HENRY W.
 Justices of the Peace, Vol. i. 255; ii. 497, 498.
 Loan of the State Credit, ii. 318, 319.
- Qualifications of Voters, i. 351, 352, 354, 355; ii. 131-134.
 Reports from Committees, i. 253; ii. 157.
 Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 253-255, 365-370, 373-375, 398, 403; ii. 117, 119-121.
- BLAGDEN, GEORGE W.
 Encouragement of Literature, Vol. ii. 155-158.
 Offered Prayer, i. 6.
BLISS, WILLIAM C.
 Time of Meeting, Vol. i. 381.
 Leave of Absence, ii. 484.
 Books, Distribution of. Vol. i. 6, 25, 45, 91, 121, 129, 338; ii. 509, 536.
 Boston Vacancy. Vol. i. 47, 256.
- BOUTWELL, GEORGE S.
 Address to the People of the Commonwealth, Vol. ii. 683, 684.
 Adjournment, ii. 423.
 Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 167.
 Appeared as Delegate for Berlin, i. 176.
 Appendix to Report of Debates, ii. 423.
 Asked leave to submit a Report in print, ii. 423.
 Closing Debate, ii. 99, 285.
 Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 240-242, 282, 575; ii. 448, 452.
 Death of Mr. Gourgas, ii. 256, 257.
 Declaration of Rights, ii. 604, 505.
 Frame of Government, i. 499, 500.
 Governor, ii. 644.
 House of Representatives, i. 463-467; ii. 11, 12, 69, 72, 98, 112, 113, 150, 172, 183-188, 191.
 Judiciary, ii. 285, 420, 421.
 Justices of the Peace, ii. 502.
 Loan of the State Credit, i. 576.
 Militia, i. 555, 556.
 Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 646-651, 653, 654, 658, 659, 663-665, 668-671, 673, 677-679, 682, 683.
 Motions, i. 282, 533, 547, 575; ii. 72, 116, 150, 162, 285, 423, 437, 452, 646, 686.
 Orders, i. 533.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 337, 346-348, 353; ii. 140, 214.
 Question of Order, ii. 644.
 Reports, ii. 644, 646, 647.
 Resolutions, ii. 646, 647.
 Uniformity of Receiving Votes at Elections, ii. 511.
 University at Cambridge, ii. 328, 331-335, 348, 487.
- BRADBURY, EBENEZER.
 Closing Debate, Vol. i. 263, 264, 535; ii. 361.
 Constitutional Conventions, ii. 579.
 Frame of Government, i. 411, 412, 418.
 Governor, i. 165, 166.
 House of Representatives, i. 600, 624, 625, 637-639, 643.
 Judiciary, ii. 417.
 Lieutenant-Governor, i. 279.
 Militia, i. 552.
 Motions, i. 325; ii. 361.
 New Towns, ii. 353.
 Pardoning Power, i. 504-506.
 Plurality, i. 217, 222; ii. 389, 370, 395.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 325.
 Question of Order, ii. 597.
 Quorum of the House, ii. 309.
 Senate, i. 118, 119.
- BRADFORD, WILLIAM J. A.
 Amendments and Enrolment, Vol. ii. 488.
 Constitutional Conventions, ii. 488, 579.
 Corporations, i. 681; ii. 5, 6.
 Declaration of Rights, ii. 508.
 Elections, i. 53.
 Governor, i. 166, 167.
 House of Representatives, i. 589.
 Judiciary, ii. 237.
 Limitation of Debate, i. 579.
 Loan of the State Credit, i. 579.
 Militia, i. 517, 531, 532, 553.
 Motions, i. 337; ii. 237.
- Orders, i. 63, 370.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 351.
 Rules and Orders, i. 17, 27.
 Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 400.
 Senate, i. 99, 101, 103, 109, 110, 119.
- BRAMAN, MILTON P.
 Place of Meeting, Vol. i. 12.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 364.
 University at Cambridge, ii. 327-331.
- BREED, HIRAM N.
 Judiciary, Vol. ii. 429.
 Motions, i. 413, 483, 579, 601; ii. 45, 130, 334, 374, 509, 523.
- BRINLEY, FRANCIS.
 Closing Debate, Vol. i. 534.
 Frame of Government, i. 405, 406.
 House of Representatives, i. 596-600.
 Motions, i. 533, 546, 547; ii. 159.
 Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 124-126, 159, 161.
 Plan of Representation, i. 403, 404.
 Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 370.
- BRIGGS, GEORGE N.
 Adjournment, Vol. ii. 113.
 Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 463-466, 471-473, 487, 491.
 Census, ii. 74-76.
 Closing Debate, i. 535, 536; ii. 99, 100, 285.
 Corporations, i. 581.
 Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 269-271; ii. 449-451.
 Death of Mr. Gourgas, ii. 258.
 Declaration of Rights, ii. 504, 505, 526, 527, 530, 554, 568, 569.
 Distribution of Books, ii. 536.
 Encouragement of Literature, ii. 171, 172.
 Frame of Government, i. 493, 499.
 Governor, i. 166, 172, 176; ii. 645.
 House of Representatives, ii. 70, 79, 91, 107, 108, 190, 193, 510, 623, 624.
 Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 562, 567.
 Judiciary, ii. 231, 232, 419, 426.
 Justices of the Peace, ii. 484, 518.
 Militia, i. 523, 524, 552, 554.
 Motions, i. 45, 318, 338, 387, 448, 533, 543, 600; ii. 76, 100, 330, 377, 470, 486, 561.
 Orders, i. 16.
 Pay Roll, ii. 374-376.
 Pardoning Power, i. 505, 507-509.
 Petitions, i. 318.
 Place of Meeting, i. 34, 36.
 Plurality, i. 145-148, 219, 222; ii. 385, 390, 395.
 Plan of Representation, i. 600.
 Preservation of the Records, ii. 452.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 316, 335, 336, 346, 347, 349, 353.
 Question of Order, ii. 590-592.
 Quorum of the House, ii. 308.
 Reports, i. 34, 579; ii. 72, 98.
 Resolutions, i. 198.
 Resolution of thanks to the President of Convention, ii. 643, 644.
 Rights of the Jury, ii. 568, 569.
 Rules and Orders, i. 17.
 Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 394, 402, 403; ii. 117.
 Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
 Time of Meeting, i. 414.
 University at Cambridge, ii. 228, 332, 333.
- BROWN, ADOLPHUS F.
 Banking, Vol. ii. 494.
 Motions, i. 120, 176, 199, 296, 386, 399; ii. 494.
- BROWN, ALPHEUS R.
 Contested Seat for Walpole, Vol. i. 53.
 Constitutions of the several States, i. 45.
 Elections, i. 53.
 House of Representatives, i. 617, 618.
 Motions, i. 4.
 Orders, i. 25, 48, 63.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 340-345.
 Reports, i. 447.

INDEX.

BROWN, ARTEMAS.

Death of Mr. Gourgass, Vol. ii. 258.
House of Representatives, ii. 79, 623.
Motions, i. 232, 296; ii. 323, 350, 577, 623.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 554, 577.
Withdrawal of a Motion, i. 232.

BROWN, HIRAM C.

Plurality, Vol. ii. 332.

BUCK, ASAHUEL.

Amendments and Enrolment, Vol. ii. 488.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 218.
Motions, i. 296, 455.
Plurality, ii. 583.

BUMPUS, CEPHAS C.

Motions, Vol. i. 104, 617.

BURLINGAME, ANSON.

Amendments and Enrolment, Vol. ii. 462.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 462, 463.
Death of Mr. Gourgass, ii. 257.
House of Representatives, ii. 106, 107.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 304-306, 331.
Resolutions, ii. 106, 107.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 536-538.
Business, Order of, Vol. i. 91, 92.
Business, Preliminary, Vol. i. 5, 16, 17.

BUTLER, BENJAMIN F.

Adjournment for two weeks, Vol. i. 21, 280.
Adjournment, i. 110, 111, 153, 630.
Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 466-468.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 39-44, 48-50, 95.
Closing Debate, i. 154, 211, 642-644; ii. 285, 447.
Corporations, ii. 6.
Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 250-252, 266, 270-272, 575.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 530, 534, 535.
Distribution of Books, ii. 536.
Encouragement of Literature, ii. 623, 632, 634, 635.
Governor, i. 164, 170-172, 174.
House of Representatives, i. 539, 593-596, 612, 616, 617, 621-625, 628, 629, 643, 644; ii. 36, 40, 54, 58-60, 62, 63, 68, 69, 71, 95, 109, 110-113, 616, 617.
Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 522, 523, 635.
Judiciary, ii. 228, 232, 233, 268, 282-284, 285, 287, 303, 304, 307, 403-406, 415, 418, 425, 429, 431, 470, 471, 509, 636, 639, 640.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 486, 499, 511, 512, 515-518.
Limitation of Debate, ii. 309, 370.
Lieutenant-Governor, i. 178, 181, 182.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 226, 228.
Militia, i. 527, 528, 570-573.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 654, 656-658, 665, 671-673, 676, 677, 684.
Motions, i. 63, 97, 140, 141, 153, 174, 178, 182, 186, 210, 211, 220, 221, 280, 282, 283, 289, 483, 616, 642; ii. 11, 13, 36, 214, 228, 304, 307, 330, 354, 361, 430, 465, 509, 510, 511, 525, 533, 536, 605, 610, 686.
Oaths and Subscriptions, i. 182-185, 188-190.
Orders, i. 44, 97, 504; ii. 354.
Pay Roll, ii. 375.
Pardoning Power, i. 505.
Petitions, i. 186.
Plurality, i. 141-143, 158, 159, 215, 216, 220-224; ii. 354, 355, 365, 595, 597-599, 605.
Population and Representation, i. 226.
Preliminary Motions, i. 164.
Qualifications of Voters, ii. 16.
Question of Order, i. 211; ii. 591, 595-597.
Quorum of the House, ii. 307, 308.
Reports from Committees, i. 120; ii. 17.
Resolutions, ii. 470.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 547, 548.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., ii. 118, 119.
Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
Senate, i. 100, 101, 104.

CADY, HENRY.

Berlin Vacancy, Vol. i. 95.
Encouragement of Literature, ii. 630.
House of Representatives, ii. 71.
Judiciary, ii. 510.
Leave of Absence, ii. 623.
Motions, i. 236.
Negligence of Railroad Corporations, ii. 551, 552.
Orders, i. 92.
Plurality, i. 222.
Rules and Orders, i. 30.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 286.
Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
CARTER, TIMOTHY W.
Qualifications of Voters, Vol. i. 363, 364.
Rules and Orders, i. 27.
CARRUTHERS, WILLIAM.
Distribution of Report of Debates, Vol. ii. 686.
CASE, ISAAC.
Motion, Vol. i. 153.
Census, Vol. i. 74, 140; ii. 73-75.
CHANDLER, AMARIAH.
Declaration of Rights, Vol. ii. 526, 528.
Encouragement of Literature, ii. 156, 631.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 501.
Motions, i. 252.
Petitions, ii. 168.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 571.
Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
CHAPIN, CHESTER W.
House of Representatives, Vol. i. 642.
Motions, i. 582.
Plan of Representation, i. 629.
CHAPIN, DANIEL E.
Declaration of Rights, Vol. ii. 526, 527, 530-532.
Distribution of Debates, ii. 643.
Encouragement of Literature, ii. 631.
Frame of Government, i. 409.
House of Representatives, ii. 609.
Motion, ii. 609.
Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
CHAPIN, HENRY.
Corporations, Vol. ii. 395, 397.
Distribution of Books, ii. 686.
Encouragement of Literature, ii. 157.
Frame of Government, i. 409.
House of Representatives, i. 635, 636.
Judiciary, ii. 431, 635, 638.
Justices of the Peace, i. 255; ii. 501, 502, 514, 519.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 661, 673, 674.
Pay Roll, ii. 43.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 353; ii. 131.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 255; ii. 116.
CHILDS, JOSIAH.
Qualifications of Voters, Vol. i. 292.
CHOATE, RUFUS.
Berlin Vacancy, Vol. i. 60-62.
Closing Debate, i. 534.
House of Representatives, i. 455-463, 481.
Judiciary, ii. 283-294.
Militia, i. 562-564.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 668-669.
Pardoning Power, i. 503, 504.
CHURCHILL, J. McKEAN.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 120; ii. 605.
Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 373.
Council, i. 575; ii. 373, 448.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 554.
Governor, i. 174.
House of Representatives, i. 640; ii. 98, 615.
Justices of the Peace, i. 255; ii. 503.
Militia, i. 529, 552-554.
Motions, i. 27, 67, 120, 186, 413, 420, 471, 567, 514; ii. 98.

New Towns, ii. 351, 435.
Orders, i. 48, 97, 121, 252.
Pardoning Power, i. 532, 503, 507-509.
Place of Meeting, i. 11.
Plurality, i. 126, 212, 213, 218; ii. 365, 604.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 237, 333, 577; ii. 3.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 255, 375, 394.
Senate, i. 119.
Claims against the Commonwealth, Vol. i. 141; ii. 680.
CLARKE, ALPHEUS B.
Motions, Vol. i. 286.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 294, 296.
COGGIN, JACOB.
Encouragement of Literature, Vol. ii. 171.
COGSWELL, NATHANIEL.
Encouragement of Literature, Vol. ii. 123, 124, 168, 169, 631.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 35.
Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
COLE, LANSING J.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 232, 252, 253.
Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 167, 465.
Corporations, i. 582; ii. 4, 5, 9.
Council and Lieut.-Governor, i. 248-250, 273.
Lieutenant-Governor, i. 279.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 18-24, 27, 28, 210.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 680.
Motions, i. 27; ii. 304, 465.
Orders, i. 62, 92, 121, 230, 232.
Petitions, i. 82.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 337.
Quorum of the House, ii. 308.
Resolutions, i. 83, 105; ii. 168.
Rules and Orders, i. 27.
Colored Citizens, Protest of, Vol. ii. 646, 686, 687.
Committees, appointment of, Vol. i. 3-6, 18, 25, 27, 45, 64, 112, 121, 141, 240, 447, 568; ii. 259, 323, 502, 643, 687.
Standing, i. 45, 46.
Time of Meeting, i. 47, 53.
Instructions to, i. 91, 379, 380, 516.
Committee of Conference, Vol. i. 25, 34.
Committee, Report of, on Credentials, Vol. i. 17.
Report of, on Elections, i. 51, 67, 483.
on Rules and Orders, i. 17.
on Distribution of Documents, ii. 646.
on Mode of Procedure, i. 5, 17, 18.
on Place of Meeting, i. 6, 34.
on Vacancies, i. 53.
on Frame of Government, i. 53, 104, 220, 272, 337, 414; ii. 11, 72, 73.
on Seating of Members, i. 53.
on Senate, i. 63.
on Reporting and Printing, i. 73, 91, 404; ii. 45, 470, 605, 636. on Governor, i. 82, 425; ii. 22.
on Lieutenant-Governor, i. 92, 425.
on Qualifications of Voters, i. 98, 502, 553, 600; ii. 98, 99, 143.
on Oaths and Subscriptions, i. 120; ii. 17.
on House of Representatives, i. 141; ii. 374.
on Order of Business, i. 153.
on the Council, i. 175.
on Corporations, i. 220.
on Judiciary, i. 231; ii. 11, 587.
on Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 253; ii. 1, 157.
on Pay Roll, i. 255; ii. 41, 353, 605, 646, 684. on Preamble and Bill of Rights, i. 273; ii. 204, 360, 361.
on Militia, i. 425, 483, 543.
on Loan of the State Credit, i. 447.
on Encouragement of Literature, i. 579; ii. 72, 98.
on Leave of Absence, i. 210, 317, 326, 601; ii. 123, 459, 623.

INDEX.

- Committee, Report of, on University at Cambridge, i. 629; ii. 249, 250.
- Report of, on Plurality, i. 82; ii. 17, 18.
- on Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 18.
- on Banking, ii. 123, 361.
- on Railroad Accidents, ii. 354.
- on Final Adjournment, ii. 361.
- on Justices of the Peace, ii. 508, 509.
- on Constitutional Conventions, ii. 519.
- on Preservation of the Records, ii. 387, 636.
- on Revision of Amendments, ii. 644.
- Communication from Benj. Stevens. Vol. i. 6, 34.
- Henry Wilson, i. 6.
- President Boston Athenæum, i. 16.
- Rev. Warren Burton, i. 17.
- James T. Robinson, i. 25.
- Speaker House of Representatives, i. 45.
- Secretary of Commonwealth, i. 120, 140, 176; ii. 123.
- Selectmen of Berlin, i. 176.
- Samuel A. Eliot, i. 112.
- President Fitchburg Railroad Company, ii. 259.
- Superintendent Merchants' Exchange, i. 25.
- Comptroller. Vol. i. 48.
- Constitution, Amended, Distribution of. Vol. ii. 641-643.
- Form of, ii. 646-684.
- Mode of Submitting to the People, ii. 471, 646-687.
- Amendments of, i. 63; ii. 370-374, 470-474, 564-587, 580.
- Constitutional Propositions. Vol. ii. 692-700.
- Constitutions of the several States. Vol. i. 25, 34, 45.
- Conventions, Constitutional. Vol. i. 48; ii. 460-474, 486-492, 519, 578-587.
- Council. Vol. i. 98, 175, 226-252, 256-266, 533; ii. 448-452, 492.
- Corporations. Vol. i. 74, 112, 140, 220, 579-582; ii. 4-11, 14, 22, 335-348, 395-402.
- COOLEIDGE, HENRY F.
- Secretary, Treasurer, &c., Vol. i. 398, 399.
- CRANE, GEORGE B.
- Motion, Vol. i. 390.
- Credentials. Vol. i. 6, 121.
- CRESSY, OLIVER S.
- Motions, Vol. ii. 255, 335, 360.
- Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 126.
- Resolution, i. 141.
- CROSBY, LEANDER.
- New Towns, Vol. ii. 435.
- CROSS, JOSEPH W.
- Death of Mr. Gourgas, Vol. ii. 258.
- CROWELL, SETH.
- Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 605.
- Motions, i. 140, 642.
- Plurality, i. 218.
- CROWNINSHIELD, FRANCIS B.
- Amendments and Enrolment, Vol. ii. 489-491.
- Berlin Vacancy, i. 23, 24, 44.
- Encouragement of Literature, ii. 633.
- House of Representatives, ii. 80-86, 109.
- Judiciary, ii. 429.
- Loan of the State Credit, ii. 322.
- Motions, i. 25, 219; ii. 143, 322, 636.
- Oaths and Subscriptions, i. 184, 185.
- Pardoning Power, i. 509-511.
- Plurality, i. 159, 218, 219; ii. 457.
- Qualifications of Voters, i. 393, 394.
- Rules and Orders, i. 28.
- Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
- CUMMINGS, JOSEPH.
- Qualifications of Voters, Vol. i. 316.
- Leave of Absence, ii. 459.
- CUSHMAN, HENRY W.
- Closing of Debate, Vol. i. 253.
- Compensation to the Officers of the Convention, ii. 1.
- Justices of the Peace, i. 255; ii. 411, 485, 486.
- Lieutenant-Governor, i. 92, 266, 268, 278, 279; ii. 395.
- Limiting Debate, ii. 285.
- Loan of the State Credit, ii. 218.
- Motions, i. 232, 277, 338, 420, 631; ii. 4, 218, 395, 685.
- Orders, i. 3, 6, 48, 98, 111, 255; ii. 1, 285, 471.
- Pay Roll, ii. 634.
- Reports, i. 11, 92.
- Resolutions, ii. 411.
- CUSHMAN, THOMAS.
- Leave of Absence, Vol. i. 317.
- Secretary, Treasurer, &c., ii. 150.
- DANA, RICHARD H. JR.
- Berlin Vacancy, Vol. i. 95.
- Constitutional Conventions, ii. 566, 578.
- Council, i. 272, 273.
- Declaration of Rights, ii. 504-507, 526, 527, 539, 534, 535, 553, 554, 556-559.
- Declination, ii. 471.
- House of Representatives, i. 489-493, 586, 612; ii. 107-109.
- Habeas Corpus, (see Declaration of Rights.)
- Judiciary, ii. 237, 238, 266-273, 282, 402-406, 408, 409, 417, 423, 426-428, 635-638.
- Loan of the State Credit, ii. 223-225.
- Militia, i. 530, 568, 569.
- Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 653, 655, 656, 660, 664, 667-669, 678, 681, 682.
- Motions, i. 198, 273, 425, 567; ii. 43, 123, 237, 577, 635, 637, 678.
- Oaths and Subscriptions, i. 184.
- Orders, i. 141, 186.
- Pay Roll, ii. 42, 43.
- Plurality, i. 198-203; ii. 383, 384, 452, 453, 456, 598.
- Qualifications of Voters, i. 354-357; ii. 138-142.
- Question of Order, ii. 596.
- Resolutions, i. 368.
- Rights of the Jury, ii. 544-546, 573, 574.
- Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 366-369, 373, 455; ii. 116, 117, 119, 123, 150, 163.
- DAVIS, GHARLES G.
- Appointment of Members of the Legislature to Office, Vol. ii. 639.
- Closing of Debate, i. 154, 339.
- Frame of Government, i. 408, 409.
- Governor, i. 167, 168, 172; ii. 73.
- House of Representatives, i. 645; ii. 63, 64, 76-79, 91, 114, 200, 614, 623, 643.
- Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 561-563.
- Judiciary, ii. 429.
- Justices of the Peace, ii. 500.
- Loan of the State Credit, ii. 32, 33.
- Motions, i. 325, 365; ii. 72, 73, 429.
- Negligence of Railroad Corporations, ii. 552.
- Orders, i. 53.
- Order of Business, ii. 643.
- Plurality, i. 126, 168; ii. 357, 358, 389, 390, 587, 588, 602, 605.
- Qualifications of Voters, i. 324, 325, 355.
- Question of Order, ii. 591, 596.
- Resolutions, ii. 639.
- Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 366.
- DAVIS, EBENEZER.
- Orders, Vol. i. 176.
- DAVIS, ISAAC.
- Berlin Vacancy, Vol. i. 22, 23.
- Corporations, ii. 10, 13, 14, 396, 397.
- Declaration of Rights, ii. 560.
- Governor, i. 163-165, 171, 512; ii. 73.
- Habeas Corpus, (see Declaration of Rights.)
- House of Representatives, ii. 626.
- Judiciary, ii. 232, 637.
- Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 664.
- Motions, i. 163, 516; ii. 14, 123, 484, 605.
- Orders, i. 82.
- Pardoning Power, i. 508, 507.
- Plurality, i. 151, 152, 195.
- Qualifications of Voters, i. 348, 349.
- Reports from Committees, i. 4, 82, 425; ii. 22.
- Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 375, 376.
- DAVIS, ROBERT T.
- Governor, Vol. i. 168.
- House of Representatives, ii. 609.
- Militia, i. 518.
- Place of Meeting, i. 13.
- Protest of Colored Citizens, ii. 687.
- DAWES HENRY L.
- Amendments and Enrolment, Vol. ii. 473, 474.
- House of Representatives, i. 536-543; ii. 194.
- Judiciary, ii. 509, 510.
- Justices of the Peace, ii. 500, 501, 514-516.
- Loan of the State Credit, ii. 211-213, 219.
- Plurality, i. 218.
- Qualifications of Voters, i. 322-324, 353.
- Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 471.
- DAY, GILMAN.
- Motions, Vol. ii. 436, 577.
- Rights of the Jury, ii. 577.
- Debates, Report of. Vol. i. 5, 22, 73, 74, 83, 84, 91; ii. 502, 636, 641, 642.
- Debate, Closing of. Vol. i. 154, 155, 253, 263, 318, 338; ii. 99, 361, 679, 680, 623.
- Debate, Limitation of. (See "Speeches, Limitation of.")
- DEMING, ELIJAH S.
- Presented Credentials, Vol. i. 97.
- DENTON, AUGUSTUS.
- Amendments and Enrolment, Vol. ii. 489-491.
- Corporations, ii. 346.
- Judiciary, ii. 432.
- Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 665.
- Motions, i. 394; ii. 346, 491.
- Petitions, i. 553.
- Plurality, ii. 365, 455.
- Qualifications of Voters, ii. 265.
- Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 378, 397, 398.
- Time of Meeting, i. 533.
- DE WITT, ALEXANDER.
- Motions, Vol. i. 275, 335.
- Banking, ii. 495.
- Corporations, ii. 335, 347.
- Documents, Distribution of. Vol. i. 22; ii. 641-643, 646, 681.
- DUNCAN, SAMUEL.
- Assorting and Counting Votes, Vol. i. 282.
- Justices of the Peace, ii. 512, 513.
- Loan of the State Credit, ii. 27, 28.
- Motions, i. 58, 63, 359, 579, 629; ii. 395, 474, 495.
- Orders, i. 63.
- Qualifications of Voters, i. 58, 579; ii. 127-129, 135, 139, 142.
- Resolutions, i. 232; ii. 474.
- Time of Meeting, i. 331.
- Uniformity of Receiving Votes at Elections, ii. 510, 511.
- DUNHAM, BRADISH.
- Petitions, Vol. ii. 259.
- DURGIN, JOHN M.
- Amendments and Enrolment, Vol. i. 34.
- Berlin Vacancy, i. 36, 51.
- Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 239, 240.
- Death of Mr. Gourgas, ii. 258.
- Frame of Government, i. 203.
- Governor, i. 164.
- House of Representatives, i. 543-546; ii. 614.
- Lieutenant-Governor, i. 281.
- Loan of the State Credit, ii. 209, 210.
- Motions, i. 210, 252, 286; ii. 21, 209-211.
- Orders, i. 105.
- Place of Meeting, i. 19, 36.
- Plurality, i. 132, 133; ii. 377, 378.
- Qualifications of Voters, i. 390-392; ii. 14.

INDEX.

EAMES, PHILIP.

Adjournment, Vol. i. 630.
 Appendix to Report of Debates, ii. 447.
 Final Adjournment, ii. 687.
 Frame of Government, i. 405, 406.
 Governor, i. 164.
 House of Representatives, i. 636, 637; ii. 61, 62, 555.
 Instructing Committees, i. 516, 517.
 Lieutenant-Governor, i. 179, 180.
 Loan of the State Credit, ii. 144.
 Motions, i. 283, 281; ii. 45, 144, 214, 555, 567.
 Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 675.
 Orders, i. 516, 517.
 Petitions, ii. 1, 214.
 Place of Meeting, i. 9, 10.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 292.
 Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 471.
 Time of Meeting, i. 533.

EARLE, JOHN M.

Adjournment, Vol. i. 25, 631; ii. 361.
 Appendix to Report of Debates, ii. 423.
 Banking, ii. 494.
 Census, i. 140; ii. 73-76.
 Corporations, i. 581, 582.
 Credentials, i. 45.
 Distribution of Books, ii. 536, 646.
 of Report of Debates, ii. 641, 642, 685, 686.
 Encouragement of Literature, ii. 144.
 Frame of Government, i. 496, 497.
 Governor, i. 176, 547; ii. 73.
 House of Representatives, i. 618, 619, 621, 624; ii. 190, 201, 555, 628.
 Judiciary, ii. 109, 229-234, 403, 417, 425.
 Justices of the Peace, ii. 512.
 Lieutenant-Governor, i. 279, 281.
 Limiting of Debate, ii. 99, 310, 448.
 Loan of the State Credit, ii. 321.
 Militia, i. 516.
 Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 657, 658, 681, 682.
 Motions, i. 16, 25, 121, 178, 198, 263, 282, 318, 512, 516, 617, 631; ii. 73, 76, 228, 484, 511, 551, 577, 628.
 New Towns, ii. 351, 353.
 Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 124-126, 159.
 Orders, i. 6, 47, 590.
 Pardoning Power, i. 509.
 Petitioning the Legislature, i. 283.
 Place of Meeting, i. 25, 26, 33.
 Plan of Representation, i. 306, 617.
 Plurality, ii. 598.
 Population and Representation, i. 231.
 Printing, i. 120.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 290.
 Question of Order, ii. 596.
 Resolutions, i. 48, 140.
 Rules and Orders, i. 27, 28, 33.
 Secretary, Treasurer, &c., ii. 150-152.
 Senate, i. 102, 110, 116, 117.

EASTON, JAMES, 2d.

Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 623.

EDWARDS, ELISHA.

Council, Vol. ii. 451.
 House of Representatives, i. 599, 600.
 Motions, i. 264, 325.
 Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 162.
 Orders, i. 63.
 Pay Roll, ii. 375.
 Place of Meeting, i. 18.
 Plurality, ii. 368.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 286, 358, 359.

ELIOT, SAMUEL A.

Letter of Resignation, Vol. i. 112.
 Election of President, Vol. i. 4 of First Secretary, i. 4.
 of Second Secretary, i. 5.
 of Chaplain, i. 11.
 of Messenger, i. 16, 22, 27, 34.
 of President pro tem., ii. 423.

Elections, General. Vol. i. 58, 59, 92, 104, 178, 198, 282, 338; ii. 670, 673.
 Voting in, ii. 670, 671.

ELY, JOSEPH M.

Judiciary, Vol. ii. 433.
 Motions, ii. 309, 437, 448, 457, 511, 605.
 New Towns, ii. 437.
 Orders, i. 43.
 Plurality, ii. 457.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 386.
 Question of Order, ii. 596.
 Quorum of the House, ii. 309.
 Uniformity of Receiving Votes, ii. 611.
 Errata. Vol. ii. 709-711.
 EUSTIS, WILLIAM T.
 Leave of Absence, Vol. i. 264.
 Explanations, Personal. Vol. ii. 305-307.

FARWELL, A. G.

Loan of the State Credit, Vol. i. 579.

FAY, SULLIVAN.

Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 623.
 Motions, ii. 45, 459, 623.
 Reports from Committees, i. 210, 317, 326, 601; ii. 459, 484, 498, 623.

FOSTER, AARON.

Closing Debate, Vol. i. 318.
 Frame of Government, i. 415, 496.
 House of Representatives, i. 601, 602, 620; ii. 86, 87.
 Loan of the State Credit, ii. 25.
 Militia, i. 551.
 Motion, i. 600.
 Orders, i. 104.
 Plurality, ii. 360.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 385, 386.

FOWLER, SAMUEL P.

Motions.-Vol. i. 232.

FREEMAN, JAMES M.

House of Representatives, Vol. i. 615, 616.
 Justices of the Peace, ii. 519.
 Motions, i. 317, 394; ii. 321, 519.
 Rights of the Jury, ii. 551.
 Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 394.

FRENCH, CHARLES A.

Plurality, Vol. i. 126.

FRENCH, RODNEY.

Amendments and Enrolment, Vol. ii. 473.
 Constitutional Conventions, ii. 473.
 Declaration of Rights, ii. 528, 554, 559, 560.
 Habeas Corpus, (see Declaration of Rights.)
 House of Representatives, ii. 57, 58, 60, 64, 71, 626.
 Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 521.
 Judiciary, ii. 281, 282, 307, 409-413.
 Motions, i. 92, 104, 220, 317; ii. 71, 397, 334, 446, 554, 587, 593.
 Oaths and Subscriptions, i. 191, 192.
 Orders, i. 53, 63.
 Petitions, i. 58, 82.
 Plurality, i. 223.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 53, 319, 320, 326.
 University at Cambridge, ii. 333.

FRENCH, SAMUEL.

Adjournment, Vol. i. 630.
 Banking, ii. 480.
 Corporations, i. 581; ii. 4, 346, 347, 399.
 Council, ii. 450.
 Frame of Government, i. 408.
 House of Representatives, i. 470; ii. 39, 190.
 Judiciary, ii. 229, 243, 275.
 Loan of the State Credit, ii. 25.
 Orders, i. 176.
 Place of Meeting, i. 36.
 Plurality, i. 217; ii. 368, 369, 388, 394.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 292, 312, 313, 578.
 Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 375, 403, 404.
 Senate, i. 117, 118.
 FROTHINGHAM, RICHARD, JR.
 Adjournment, Vol. i. 111.
 Banking, ii. 434, 474-479, 484, 494, 495.

Berlin Vacancy, i. 47, 50.
 Boston Vacancies, i. 97.
 Choice of Messenger, i. 22.
 Corporations, ii. 5, 337-339, 346.
 Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 244.
 Encouragement of Literature, ii. 155, 631.
 Explanation, ii. 434.
 Frame of Government, i. 416-418, 627.
 House of Representatives, i. 624, 627.
 Judiciary, ii. 230, 231, 418, 419.
 Justices of the Peace, ii. 501, 502.
 Lieutenant-Governor, i. 180, 182.
 Militia, i. 528-530.
 Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 681.
 Motions, i. 74, 97, 186; ii. 419, 433, 681.
 New Towns, ii. 349, 350, 352.
 Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 125.
 Orders, i. 74, 83.
 Petitions, i. 394.
 Plurality, i. 219, 223; ii. 358, 394.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 314, 315, 324.
 Reporting and Printing, i. 83.
 Reports from Committees, ii. 123, 361.
 Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)

GARDNER, HENRY J.

Adjournment, Vol. ii. 580.
 House of Representatives, i. 642; ii. 617, 628.
 Judiciary, ii. 419.
 Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 659, 660, 663.
 Motions, ii. 350, 566.
 New Towns, ii. 349.
 Plurality, ii. 593, 594, 598.
 Question of Order, ii. 597.
 University at Cambridge, ii. 348.
 GARDNER, JOHN SON.
 Adjournment, Vol. i. 20, 21.
 Amendments, i. 21.
 Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 245, 246.
 Berlin Vacancy, i. 37.
 Declaration of Rights, ii. 506, 530.
 Frame of Government, i. 500.
 House of Representatives, i. 621, 640, 641; ii. 64, 65, 71, 79, 620, 621.
 Judiciary, ii. 235.
 Militia, i. 570.
 Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 656.
 Motions, i. 19, 219; ii. 71, 214, 550.
 New Towns, ii. 349.
 Orders, i. 74.
 Petitioning the Legislature, i. 282, 283.
 Plan of Representation, i. 590, 591, 640, 641.
 Place of Meeting, i. 7, 19, 37.
 Plurality, ii. 365, 388, 389, 600.
 Rights of the Jury, ii. 365, 550.
 Senate, i. 100.
 General Court. Vol. i. 63, 82, 92, 493-502; ii. 652, 653.

GILBERT, WASHINGTON.

Orders, Vol. i. 105.

GILES, JOEL.

Amendments and Enrolment, Vol. ii. 248, 249, 372, 373.
 Constitutional Conventions, ii. 582, 583.
 Council, i. 263-266.
 House of Representatives, ii. 58-60.
 Judiciary, ii. 413, 414.
 Loan of the State Credit, ii. 226, 320, 321.
 Motions, ii. 228.
 Senate, i. 101, 102.
 University at Cambridge, ii. 334, 349.
 GOOCH, DANIEL W.
 Assignment of Seats, Vol. i. 67.
 Governor, i. 174.
 Judiciary, ii. 431.
 Justices of the Peace, ii. 518.
 Motions, ii. 518.

INDEX.

- Oaths and Subscriptions, i. 192; ii. 160, 161.
Plurality, ii. 364, 454, 455.
- GOURGAS, FRANCIS R.
Berlin Vacancy, Vol. i. 92.
Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 232, 233, 236, 237.
Credentials of the Delegate for Berlin, i. 176.
Motions, i. 5, 25, 26, 73, 98, 113.
Oaths of Office to the Secretaries of the Convention, i. 25.
Orders, i. 6, 43, 91.
Preservation of Records, i. 6.
Reporting and Printing, i. 73, 83, 84, 91.
Reports from Committees, i. 73, 91, 404.
Senate, i. 113.
Governor, Vol. i. 63, 82, 164-174, 176-178, 198, 252, 512, 547; ii. 73, 663, 664.
Gourgas, Francis R., Death of, Vol. ii. 256-259.
Government, Frame of, Vol. i. 53, 82, 83, 92, 98, 104, 140, 178, 263, 337, 405-413, 414-420, 493, 502; ii. 72, 652, 653.
Government, Seat of, Vol. i. 232.
- GRAY, JOHN C.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 140, 163, 289.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 95.
Census, ii. 76.
Closing Debate, i. 154, 211.
Corporations, ii. 341, 342, 397-399.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 538.
Frame of Government, i. 415.
House of Representatives, i. 452-454, 612-615, 619.
Judiciary, ii. 228, 230, 403, 417, 421-423, 426.
Lieutenant-Governor, i. 182, 280, 281.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 225, 226, 228, 322.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 660, 661.
Motions, i. 30, 140, 230; ii. 203.
Orders, i. 74, 225, 226.
Place of Meeting, i. 14, 15, 34, 35.
Plurality, i. 153, 155, 156, 158, 210, 211, 217, 218; ii. 365, 385, 386, 395, 588.
Population and Representation, i. 225, 226, 231.
Question of Order, i. 211; ii. 588, 589.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 549, 550.
Rules and Orders, i. 28-30.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 378, 398-400.
- GREENE, WILLIAM B.
Berlin Vacancy, Vol. i. 66, 88.
Motions, i. 256, 393, 568, 629; ii. 285, 445.
Pay Roll, ii. 685.
Petitions, i. 111, 187, 256, 317, 413, 437, 568; ii. 21, 22.
Qualifications of Voters, ii. 250-253, 265.
Resolutions, i. 63.
Senate, i. 103, 104.
Woman's Rights, (see Qualifications of Voters.)
- GREENLEAF, SIMON.
Judiciary, Vol. i. 278-281.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 567, 568.
- GRISWOLD, WHITING.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 111, 252; ii. 113, 580.
Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 448, 459, 460, 565.
Appendix to the Report of Debates, ii. 447.
Banking, ii. 497.
Census, ii. 74.
Closing Debate, ii. 285, 496.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 474, 475, 519, 565.
Council, ii. 448, 451.
Contested Seat of Delegate for Walpole, i. 53.
Elections, i. 53.
Frame of Government, i. 500, 501.
House of Representatives, i. 420-425, 426-434, 435, 609, 623-625, 627-629; ii. 46, 65, 66, 71, 90, 104, 108, 109, 176-178, 192, 193, 625, 626, 628.
Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 561.
Judiciary, ii. 277, 285.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 484, 498, 500, 502.
Leave of Absence, ii. 623.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 219, 220, 311, 312.
Motions, i. 120, 141, 379, 483; ii. 451, 471, 474, 484, 502, 580, 628, 646.
Orders, i. 360.
Place of Meeting, i. 10, 26.
Plurality, i. 137-140, 157; ii. 362, 363.
Population and Representation, i. 231.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 358.
Quorum of the House, ii. 307.
Question of Order, ii. 596.
Reports from Committees, i. 4, 141; ii. 374.
Time of Meeting, i. 380.
- Habeas Corpus. Vol. ii. 503, 536-551, 680.
- HALE, ARTEMAS.
Amendment and Enrolment, Vol. i. 214; ii. 166, 244, 247, 370, 371.
Appointment of Members of the Legislature to Office, ii. 639.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 46.
Census, ii. 75.
Closing Debate, i. 318, 534.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 460, 463.
Corporations, ii. 341.
Distribution of Amended Constitution, ii. 641.
House of Representatives, ii. 71.
Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 522.
Judiciary, ii. 640.
Mode of submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 656.
Motions, i. 6, 141, 219, 381, 463; ii. 76, 249, 465.
Plurality, i. 214; ii. 595, 600.
Question of Order, ii. 592.
- HALE, NATHAN.
Closing Debate, Vol. ii. 99.
Declination, i. 98.
House of Representatives, i. 434-437; ii. 100, 115, 188, 189, 201, 202.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 664.
Motions, i. 120, 434; ii. 115.
Plurality, i. 112, 143.
Reporting and Printing, i. 73, 74.
Resolutions, i. 112.
- HALL, CHARLES B.
Banking, Vol. ii. 492-496.
Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 245.
Declination, i. 405.
Justices of the Peace, i. 254, 255.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 35.
Motions, i. 27, 129, 178, 263; ii. 1, 3, 35.
Orders, i. 5, 48.
Plurality, i. 129-132, 148, 164.
Reports from Committees, i. 17; ii. 1, 157.
Rules and Orders, i. 17, 28, 29.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 254.
- HALLETT, B. F.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 110, 163.
Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 245-247, 249, 370-372, 459-462, 464, 469, 470, 472, 474, 590, 591.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 23, 24, 67-73, 81, 85-91.
Closing Debate, ii. 99.
Council, i. 256-262, 275, 277; ii. 451, 452, 474, 492.
Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 226-230, 237, 252.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 460-462, 464, 469, 470, 472, 474, 486-488, 584.
Corporations, ii. 335-337, 401.
Declination, i. 25.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 504-508, 528-536, 552-554, 556-558.
Distribution of the Report of Debates, ii. 686.
Encouragement of Literature, ii. 629, 635.
Final Adjournment, ii. 688.
Frame of Government, i. 437, 410, 411, 495, 496.
Governor, i. 171-174, 647.
Habeas Corpus, (see Declaration of Rights)
House of Representatives, i. 471-481, 485, 486; ii. 41, 93, 94, 100-102, 179, 180, 190-192, 194, 618-620.
Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 522-524, 561.
- Judiciary, ii. 238, 276, 303, 407-409, 429, 636.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 486, 497, 498, 500, 502, 516-518.
Lieutenant-Governor, i. 180, 181.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 221-223.
Militia, i. 516, 526, 527, 532, 564-566.
Motions, i. 7, 22, 225, 252; ii. 304, 370, 431, 451, 452, 474, 502.
Mode of Procedure, i. 5.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 652, 664, 665, 667, 669-672, 679, 681, 682, 684.
Negligence of Railroad Corporations, ii. 354, 551.
New Towns, ii. 351, 352, 434-437.
Oaths and Subscriptions, i. 184-190; ii. 160, 161.
Orders, i. 5, 6, 16.
Pardoning Power, i. 507.
Pay Roll, ii. 43, 44.
Place of Meeting, i. 7, 8, 11, 16, 22, 120.
Plurality, i. 150, 151, 158, 218, 219; ii. 359, 360, 395.
Protest of Colored Citizens, ii. 686, 687.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 233, 294, 311, 316, 317, 334, 357, 358; ii. 140, 143.
Question of Order, ii. 590, 591.
Quorum of the House, ii. 308, 309.
Reporting and Printing, i. 5.
Reports from Committees, i. 175; ii. 354, 360, 361, 519.
Resolutions, i. 5, 9, 225; ii. 228.
Rights of the Jury, i. 541-546, 571, 574, 575.
Senate, i. 113-115.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 371-373, 378, 379, 401-402.
Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
University at Cambridge, ii. 441.
- HAPGOOD, LYMAN W.
Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 623.
- HARMON, PHINEAS.
Orders, Vol. i. 83, 290.
- HASKELL, GEORGE.
House of Representatives, Vol. ii. 50-55, 622.
Qualifications of Voters, ii. 14-16.
- HATHAWAY, ELNAHAN P.
Amendments and Enrolment, Vol. ii. 490, 491.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 23, 24, 41, 42.
Closing Debate, i. 318.
Council, i. 277.
Governor, i. 165, 166.
House of Representatives, i. 644; ii. 60-63, 68, 69, 113, 114, 618, 622, 623.
Judiciary, ii. 234.
Justices of the Peace, i. 255; ii. 485, 486, 516, 517.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 228, 227, 315, 316.
Militia, i. 515, 516, 567, 569, 571.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 652, 663, 664, 670, 674, 682.
Motions, i. 193; ii. 115, 458, 623.
Orders, i. 63.
Pardoning Power, i. 505.
Place of Meeting, i. 13, 33.
Plurality, i. 218-210, 219; ii. 365, 379-381, 392, 588, 614, 605.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 325; ii. 15, 16, 251.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 255, 471.
Senators in Congress, i. 198, 199.
Senate, i. 102, 103, 118, 119.
- HAZWELL, CHARLES C.
Appeared and took seat in Convention, as Delegate from Concord, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr Gourgas, Vol. ii. 374.
- HENRY, SAMUEL.
Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 498.
- HILLARD, GEORGE S.
Amendments and Enrolment, Vol. ii. 491.
Closing Debate, i. 213, 214.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 527-530, 533.
Final Adjournment, ii. 687, 688.

INDEX.

- House of Representatives, i. 546, 582-588.
 Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 522, 523.
 Judiciary, ii. 415, 416, 419, 420, 510.
 Loan of the State Credit, ii. 31, 32.
 Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 654, 661, 662, 673, 677.
 Negligence of Railroad Corporations, ii. 551.
 Pay Roll, ii. 43.
 Personal Explanation, ii. 306.
 Plurality, i. 143, 144, 213, 214; ii. 385, 392, 393, 395, 599.
 Question of Order, i. 211; ii. 597, 645.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 317, 320-322, 362.
 Rights of the Jury, ii. 538-540, 571, 572.
 Secretary, Treasurer, &c., ii. 118, 145-149.
 Senate, i. 101, 102.
- HOBART, AARON.
 Orders, Vol. i. 111.
- HOBBS, EDWIN.
 Death of Mr. Gourgas, Vol. ii. 257, 258.
 Motions, ii. 259.
 Presented Credentials of Delegate from Concord, ii. 374.
- HOLDER, NATHANIEL.
 Closing Debate, Vol. i. 154.
 Constitutional Conventions, ii. 581.
 Declaration of Rights, ii. 530, 533.
 House of Representatives, i. 611, 612.
 Judiciary, ii. 242, 243.
 Motions, i. 155; ii. 533, 581.
 Plurality, i. 127, 128, 153.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 386.
 Senate, i. 104.
- Homestead, Free. Vol. i. 47.
- HOOD, GEORGE.
 Adjournment, Vol. i. 120, 140.
 Berlin Vacancy, i. 95.
 Concerning First Secretary of Convention, i. 4.
 Governor, i. 172, 173.
 House of Representatives, i. 628, 645.
 Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 562.
 Judiciary, ii. 294-298, 416-418.
 Motions, i. 29, 44, 174, 386; ii. 276.
 New Towns, ii. 435.
 Orders, i. 91.
 Pay Roll, ii. 43, 44.
 Place of Meeting, i. 45, 120.
 Printing, i. 120.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 286-288, 295, 296, 325, 335, 336, 353; ii. 15.
 Reports, i. 153.
 Rules and Orders, i. 29, 30.
 Senate, i. 119.
- HOOPER, FOSTER.
 Adjournment, Vol. i. 21, 289.
 Banking, ii. 479, 480, 494.
 Choice of President, i. 4.
 Choice of Secretaries, i. 3, 5.
 Choice of Messenger, i. 27.
 Closing Debate, i. 154, 533, 534, 643.
 Constitutional Conventions, ii. 581, 583, 586.
 Council, i. 275.
 Distribution of Debates, ii. 641, 643.
 Governor, i. 164, 647.
 House of Representatives, i. 587-589, 616, 643; ii. 64, 78, 79, 202, 613.
 Judiciary, ii. 230, 233, 235-237, 241, 242, 277, 278, 403, 411, 412, 419, 432, 640.
 Lieutenant-Governor, i. 278-280.
 Loan of the State Credit, ii. 29.
 Militia, i. 558.
 Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 664.
 Mode of Procedure, i. 5.
 Motions, i. 3, 4, 5, 25, 27, 45, 67, 193, 306, 384, 367; ii. 126, 329, 386, 428, 430, 437, 452.
 New Towns, ii. 349, 350, 434-437.
 Orders, i. 6, 74, 98.
 Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 126, 169.
 Place of Meeting, i. 2, 10, 27.
- Plurality, i. 45, 46, 121, 122, 144, 145, 217, 218, 221, 224, 225; ii. 383-382, 388, 455.
 Preliminary Business, i. 5.
 Printing, i. 120, 129.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 287, 307, 308, 316, 364; ii. 14, 265.
 Reports, i. 82.
 Resolutions, i. 45, 506.
 Rules and Orders, i. 17, 30.
 Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 366, 367, 374.
 Senate, i. 100.
 Time of Meeting, i. 381.
 University at Cambridge, ii. 329.
- HOPKINSON, THOMAS.
 Constitutional Conventions, Vol. ii. 566.
 Contested Seat of Delegate from Walpole, i. 55.
 Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 237.
 Death of Mr. Gourgas, ii. 259.
 Declaration of Rights, ii. 505, 506.
 Governor, i. 169, 170; 173, 174.
 Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 523, 524.
 Judiciary, ii. 636.
 Loan of the State Credit, ii. 213-217, 226, 311.
 Militia, i. 520, 521, 523, 671.
 Motions, i. 174, 263, 532, 575, 576.
 Oaths and Subscriptions, i. 192.
 Plurality, i. 215; ii. 395.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 390, 391, 578.
 University at Cambridge, ii. 234.
- HOUGHTON, SAMUEL.
 Leave of Absence, ii. 123.
 Motions, i. 630.
 Orders, i. 601, 630.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 296, 315, 316, 578.
- House of Representatives, Vol. i. 46, 48, 92, 97, 112, 141, 220, 226, 237, 231, 232, 396, 398, 493, 404, 420-493, 536-547, 582-645; ii. 11, 12, 36-41, 76-98, 100-116, 162-165, 172-234, 337-309, 606-628.
- HOYT, HENRY K.
 Judiciary, Vol. ii. 243.
 Leave of Absence, ii. 623.
 Motions, i. 220.
 New Towns, ii. 351-353.
 Petitions, i. 220.
- HUBBARD, WILLIAM J.
 Constitutional Conventions, Vol. ii. 587.
 Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 214, 245.
 Governor, i. 164, 168.
 House of Representatives, i. 641, 642; ii. 628.
 Judiciary, ii. 403.
 Lieutenant-Governor, i. 181, 182, 279-281.
 Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 649, 670, 671.
 Motions, i. 34, 111.
 Oaths and Subscriptions, i. 183, 184.
 Place of Meeting, i. 7, 33, 34.
 Printing, i. 34.
 Plurality, i. 157, 158, 211, 212, 217; ii. 365, 605.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 112, 287-289, 311, 312, 316.
 Reference of a Petition, i. 112.
 Rules and Orders, i. 30, 31.
 Senate, i. 119.
 Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 375, 376.
 University at Cambridge, ii. 348.
- HUNTINGTON, ASAHEL.
 Qualifications of Voters, Vol. ii. 136-138.
 Rights of the Jury, ii. 575, 576.
- HUNTINGTON, CHARLES P.
 Appointment of Members of the Legislature to Office, Vol. ii. 643.
 Berlin Vacancy, i. 65, 66, 89.
 Corporations, ii. 5, 6.
 House of Representatives, i. 644; ii. 41, 45-50, 55-57, 555.
 Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 561.
 Judiciary, ii. 429.
 Justices of the Peace, ii. 512.
 Motions, ii. 41, 640.
 Pardoning Power, i. 504.
- Plan of Representation, i. 600, 616.
 Plurality, i. 217.
 Qualifications of Voters, ii. 138, 139.
 Rights of the Jury, ii. 550, 569.
 University at Cambridge, ii. 442.
- HUNTINGTON, GEORGE H.
 Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 555.
- HURLBURT, SAMUEL A.
 Plurality, Vol. i. 206.
- HURLBUT, MOSES C.
 Adjournment, Vol. i. 20.
 Loan of the State Credit, ii. 28, 29.
 Motions, i. 455, 617.
 Plurality, i. 236; ii. 455, 603.
 Qualifications of Voters, i. 359, 360.
- HYDE, BENJAMIN D.
 Berlin Vacancy, Vol. i. 64, 65.
 Motions, ii. 375.
 Pay Roll, ii. 375.
 Plurality, i. 128.
- IDE, ABIJAH M., JR.
 Orders, Vol. i. 92.
 Imprisonment for Debt. Vol. i. 47, 290; ii. 519-525, 561-564, 567, 635.
 Imprisonment, False. Vol. i. 337.
- JAMES, WILLIAM.
 Adjournment, Vol. i. 630, 631.
 Loan of the State Credit, ii. 35.
 Militia, i. 571-573.
 Motions, i. 380; ii. 73, 193.
 New Towns, ii. 435.
 Plurality, i. 380; ii. 382.
- JENKS, SAMUEL H.
 Declaration of Rights, Vol. ii. 530.
 Encouragement of Literature, ii. 632.
 House of Representatives, ii. 109.
 Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 561.
 Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 652, 654, 665, 682.
 Motions, ii. 109.
 Plan of Representation, i. 533.
 Question of Order, ii. 596.
 Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
- JENKINS, JOHN.
 Constitutional Conventions, Vol. ii. 578, 580.
 Judges, List of. Vol. i. 600.
 Judiciary. Vol. i. 53, 63, 74, 82, 83, 98, 186, 231, 232, 290, 506, 552, 553, 590, 600; ii. 73, 228-244, 266-375, 402-434, 635-640.
 Jury, Rights of the. (See "Rights, Declaration of.") Justices of the Peace. Vol. i. 175, 255, 256; ii. 484, 485, 497-502, 508, 509, 511-519.
- KELLOGG, GILES C.
 Frame of Government, Vol. i. 420.
 Lieutenant-Governor, i. 280, 281.
 Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 651.
 Oaths and Subscriptions, i. 185, 186.
 Orders, i. 74.
- KELLOGG, MARTIN R.
 Leave of Absence. Vol. i. 512; ii. 484.
- KEYES, EDWARD L.
 Adjournment, Vol. i. 21, 22, 111.
 Banking, ii. 493, 494.
 Berlin Vacancy, i. 47, 95.
 Choice of Secretary, i. 4.
 Closing Debate, i. 154.
 Contested Seat of Delegate for Walpole, i. 57, 58.
 Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 233-236.
 Council, i. 675; ii. 449, 453.
 Declaration of Rights, ii. 527, 531, 550, 557.
 Encouragement of Literature, ii. 155, 156, 629.
 Frame of Government, i. 493-495, 496, 501.
 Governor, i. 169, 170.
 Habeas Corpus, (see Declaration of Rights.)

INDEX.

- House of Representatives, i. 467-470; ii. 12, 37, 66, 67, 71, 79, 89, 164.
Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 521, 522, 563.
Judiciary, ii. 237, 238, 267, 273-276, 286, 416, 426, 428, 431, 639.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 500, 519.
Lieutenant-Governor, i. 179.
Limiting Debate, ii. 443.
Loan of the State Credit, i. 576; ii. 29-31.
Militia, i. 524, 525, 532, 533, 550, 554-556, 574, 575.
Motions, i. 4, 5, 6, 35; ii. 12, 432, 592.
New Towns, ii. 434, 435.
Oaths and Subscriptions, i. 191; ii. 193.
Orders, i. 6.
Pardoning Power, i. 504, 505, 508-512.
Pay Roll, ii. 43.
Petitions, i. 58, 112, 283.
Place of Meeting, i. 18, 19, 35-37.
Plurality, i. 126, 127, 153-160, 204-206, 220, 221, 225; ii. 381, 382, 384, 390-392, 453, 454.
Printing, i. 120.
Protest of Colored Citizens, ii. 646.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 294, 295; ii. 15, 16, 253-255.
Reference of a Petition, i. 112.
Reporting and Printing, i. 83.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 539, 576.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., ii. 147, 149, 150.
Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
Senate, i. 119.
Special Assignment, ii. 164, 165.
- KINGMAN, JOSEPH.
Council and Lieutenant-Governor, Vol. i. 247.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 531.
Frame of Government, i. 412, 420, 501.
House of Representatives, ii. 39, 40, 112.
Judiciary, ii. 237, 238.
Motions, i. 232, 272, 404; ii. 112, 124, 127, 237, 586.
Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 124, 126, 160.
Orders, i. 337.
Qualifications of Voters, ii. 263, 264, 276, 277.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 373.
Senate, i. 118.
- KINSMAN, HENRY W.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 110, 630.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 25.
Closing of Debate, i. 253.
Governor, i. 164.
House of Representatives, i. 455, 604-606; ii. 190.
Judiciary, ii. 431.
Limiting of Debate, ii. 376.
Motions, i. 454, 493.
New Towns, ii. 352.
Orders, i. 25.
Plurality, i. 196, 197, 205, 219.
Senate, i. 102, 104-106.
- KNIGHT, HIRAM.
Orders, Vol. i. 104.
- KNIGHT, JOSEPH.
Leave of Absence, Vol. i. 326.
- KNOWLTON, CHARLES L.
Presented Credentials, Vol. i. 121.
Leave of Absence, ii. 623.
- KNOWLTON, J. S. C.
Judiciary, Vol. ii. 432, 403, 405, 426.
Limitation of Debate, i. 154; ii. 310.
Lieutenant-Governor, i. 279.
Memorial, i. 7.
Motions, i. 22, 154, 425, 594; ii. 323, 402, 437.
Mode of Procedure, i. 22.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 681, 682.
Orders, ii. 335.
Plurality, i. 144.
Reports, i. 629, 630; ii. 249, 250.
University at Cambridge, ii. 323-327, 329, 333.
- LADD, JOHN S.
Elections, Vol. i. 51, 52.
Orders, i. 22.
Plurality, ii. 361, 362.
Report of Debates, i. 22.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 541.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 314, 315.
Town of Walpole, i. 51, 52.
- LAWTON, JOB G., JR.
Motions, Vol. i. 169, 218, 325, 381.
Laws, Digest of. Vol. i. 283.
Legislature, Limiting Sessions of. Vol. i. 48, 63.
- LELAND, ALDEN.
Distribution of Debates, Vol. ii. 642, 685.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 502.
Motions, i. 129, 290; ii. 157.
New Towns, ii. 350.
Orders, i. 63, 83.
Printing, i. 129.
Uniformity of Receiving Votes, ii. 511.
- Lieutenant-Governor. Vol. i. 92, 176, 178-182, 266-272, 277-282; ii. 395, 460, 664.
- Literature, Encouragement of. Vol. i. 63, 104, 105, 111, 186, 579; ii. 144, 168-172, 377, 484.
- LIVERMORE, ISAAC.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 289.
Banking, ii. 484.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 44.
Census, ii. 74.
Compensation to Officers of Convention, ii. 1.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 519.
Exchange Reading Room, i. 25.
Frame of Government, i. 498.
Governor, i. 170, 171, 173, 174.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 654, 655, 683.
Motions, i. 232; ii. 1, 445, 598, 645.
Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 126.
Orders, i. 44, 47.
Pay Roll, ii. 41, 42, 375, 605, 606, 645, 646, 685.
Place of Meeting, i. 13.
Question of Order, ii. 646.
Reports, i. 255; ii. 41, 353, 646, 684.
- LORD, OTIS P.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 111.
Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 466-468, 565, 566.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 87-91, 94.
Closing Debate, i. 318; ii. 496.
Corporations, ii. 8-10, 13, 14.
Council, ii. 448, 450.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 466, 467, 491, 565, 566, 578, 581, 582, 586, 587.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 504, 507, 508, 526, 530-532, 560.
Elections, i. 52.
Governor, ii. 644.
House of Representatives, ii. 166, 162-165, 198-202.
Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 522, 561, 562.
Judiciary, ii. 230, 403, 406, 407, 414, 415, 418, 432, 637, 638.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 498-501, 514, 515.
Lieutenant-Governor, i. 182.
Limitation of Debate, ii. 498.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 321, 322.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 647-651, 653-656, 659-662, 665, 667-670.
Motions, i. 325, 326; ii. 321, 386, 508, 594.
New Towns, ii. 386, 435.
Pay Roll, ii. 376, 645.
Place of Meeting, i. 14.
Plurality, ii. 367, 368, 385, 386, 458, 594, 602-605.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 297-301, 303, 314, 316, 325-331.
Question of Order, ii. 587-589, 596, 644, 645.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 548, 549, 574, 575.
Rules and Orders, i. 28, 30, 31.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., ii. 121, 122, 151-154.
Special Assignment, ii. 162-164.
- LOTHROP, SAMUEL K.
Encouragement of Literature, Vol. ii. 155, 169-171, 630-632.
Final Adjournment, ii. 687.
Orders, i. 97, 176.
Place of Meeting, i. 33.
Prayer, i. 3; ii. 688.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 387-390; ii. 3.
Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
University at Cambridge, ii. 333, 334, 438-441.
- MARBLE, WILLIAM P.
Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 623.
- MARCY, LABAN.
Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 623.
- MARVIN, ABIAH P.
Encouragement of Literature, Vol. i. 579.
House of Representatives, ii. 55-57, 79.
Motions, ii. 3, 237, 256, 264.
Orders, i. 82, 186.
Qualifications of Voters, ii. 3, 4, 256, 262-266, 323.
- MARVIN, THEOPHILUS R.
Distribution of Debates, Vol. ii. 641.
Final Adjournment, ii. 688.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 682.
Motion, ii. 682.
- MASON, CHARLES.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, Vol. ii. 674, 679.
Order, i. 82.
- MEADER, REUBEN.
Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 459.
- Members, List of. Vol. i. 1-3.
- Memorials and Petitions of Edwin Lawrence and Nehemiah Flanders. Vol. i. 17.
James Russell, i. 45.
John W. Le Barnes and others, i. 58.
Francis Jackson and others, i. 58.
Harriet L. Randall and others, i. 58.
James B. Allen and others, i. 58.
T. W. Higginson and others, i. 82.
Citizens of Roxbury, and citizens of Egremont, in aid of that of J. W. Le Barnes and others, i. 82.
Harriet K. Hunt, i. 82.
Benjamin K. Brown and others, i. 97.
Wendell Phillips and others, i. 111.
Abby B. Alcott and others, i. 111.
Charles Phelps and others, of Munroe, Joseph Proctor and others, Jacob W. Hinckley and others, George W. Todd and others, Frederic W. Folger and others, in aid of that of J. W. Le Barnes and others, i. 154.
Josiah Henshaw and others, i. 186.
J. A. Saxton and others, i. 220.
John P. Coburn and others, i. 220.
Zilpha W. H. Spooner and others, i. 256.
Citizens of Massachusetts, i. 283.
Abby Alcott and others, i. 317.
Jonathan E. Field and others, i. 318.
Timothy Fletcher and others, i. 394.
Lucretia Upham and others, i. 413.
Wendell Phillips and others, i. 413.
Mary E. C. Higginson and others, i. 437.
Emily A. Loveland and others, i. 437.
Nathaniel T. Johnson and others, i. 471.
Silas Lamson and others, i. 493.
J. F. Evans and others, i. 517.
A. T. Willard and others, i. 553.
Edward A. Newton and others, i. 553.
J. G. Forman and others, i. 568.
Josiah Francis and others, ii. 1.
Betsey T. Heywood and others, ii. 21.
Abby H. Price and others, ii. 22.
C. J. J. Ingersoll and others, ii. 168.
Otis F. R. Waite and others, ii. 214.
James Cain and others, ii. 259.
- Meeting, Place of. Vol. i. 6-16, 18, 19, 33-37, 44.

INDEX.

- Meeting, Time of. Vol. i. 16, 25, 27, 44, 45, 232, 280, 281, 414, 502, 533-536; ii. 214, 259.
- MILLER, SETH, JR.
Constitutional Conventions, Vol. ii. 583.
Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 250, 281.
Governor, i. 165, 547.
Hour of Meeting, i. 232.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 502.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 35.
Militia, i. 515, 533, 547-576.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 664, 672.
Motions, i. 232; ii. 35, 502, 561.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 568.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 374, 375.
Militia. Vol. i. 273, 425, 437, 483, 512-533, 547-576; ii. 1-3, 672.
- MIXTER, SAMUEL.
Distribution of Books, Vol. ii. 509, 538.
Motions, i. 463.
Order, ii. 509.
Plurality, ii. 601.
- Mode of Proceeding. Vol. i. 17, 18, 22.
- Monitors. Vol. i. 46, 105.
- MOREY, GEORGE.
Council, Vol. i. 286.
Contested Seat of Delegate from Walpole, i. 56, 57.
Judiciary, ii. 640.
Law Library Association, i. 17.
Motions, ii. 554.
Plurality, ii. 362-364.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 290, 359, 360.
- MORSS, JOSEPH B.
House of Representatives, Vol. i. 602-604.
Orders, i. 92.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 313, 314.
- MORTON, ELBRIDGE G.
Frame of Government, Vol. i. 412, 413.
Orders, i. 5, 11, 25, 34.
Place of Meeting, i. 12.
Pay Roll, ii. 42.
Request, i. 6.
Time of Meeting, i. 6, 26.
- MORTON, MARCUS.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 280; ii. 525.
Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 448, 491.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 24, 37-41.
Closing Debate, i. 154, 338.
Council, i. 273-275.
Distribution of Debates, ii. 642.
Election of Officers, i. 4.
Frame of Government, i. 416-420.
Governor, i. 168, 174; ii. 645.
House of Representatives, ii. 66, 102-106, 110-114, 172-176, 201, 204, 555, 606, 607, 626, 627.
Judiciary, ii. 228, 229, 233-236, 244, 299-303, 638, 640.
Justices of the Peace, i. 254; ii. 516.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 33-35, 218-221.
Mode of Organizing, i. 4.
Mode of submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 610, 656, 658, 659, 674-676.
Motions, i. 3, 220, 417; ii. 35, 110, 299, 433, 448, 525, 611.
Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 160, 161.
Orders, ii. 525.
Place of Meeting, i. 15, 16.
Printing, i. 34.
Plurality, i. 134, 135, 142, 193-195, 201, 204, 219, 221.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 339, 340, 354, 386; ii. 130, 133, 135, 136, 265.
Question of Order, ii. 590, 591.
Reports from Committees, i. 231, 232; ii. 11, 587.
Resolutions, ii. 35.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 572-574.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 253, 254, 400, 401.
Senate, i. 115-117.
- MORTON, MARCUS, JR.
Judiciary, ii. 229, 429.
- Justices of the Peace, ii. 499, 501, 502.
Motions, i. 425, 501; ii. 14, 525.
Orders, i. 82.
Qualifications of Voters, ii. 15.
- MORTON, WILLIAM S.
Corporations, Vol. ii. 402.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 578.
Lieutenant-Governor, i. 278.
Motions, i. 163, 240, 280, 463, 570; ii. 13, 150, 561.
Militia, i. 573.
Orders, i. 58, 256, 573.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 291, 292, 578; ii. 16.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 367; ii. 150, 151.
- NAYSON, JONATHAN.
Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 165-167, 244, 245, 249, 474.
Banking, ii. 495.
Corporations, i. 581; ii. 12-14.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 566.
Election of Officers, i. 4.
Frame of Government, i. 417, 418.
Memorials, i. 17.
Motions, i. 4, 84, 112, 121, 241, 581; ii. 10, 244.
Place of Meeting, i. 16, 22, 26, 33, 120.
Plurality, i. 219.
Reports, ii. 18.
Senate, i. 112, 113.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 373.
Suspension of the Rules, i. 16.
University at Cambridge, ii. 446.
- NEWMAN, CHARLES.
Declaration of Rights, Vol. ii. 508.
- NORTON, ALFRED.
Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 411.
- NOYES, DANIEL.
Motions, Vol. i. 25, 27, 111, 153.
- Oaths and Subscriptions. Vol. i. 105, 182-192, 211, 379; ii. 124-126, 159-162, 193.
Officers, County and District. Vol. i. 53, 105, 306, 380; ii. 150-155, 673.
Office, Tenure of. Vol. ii. 635-640, 673.
- OLIVER, HENRY K.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 199.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 535.
House of Representatives, ii. 71.
Lieutenant-Governor, i. 279.
Militia, i. 513-519, 530, 531, 533, 558-562, 565, 568-570, 573, 574; ii. 1, 2, 640.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 655, 657, 664, 672, 679.
Motions, i. 198, 379, 381; ii. 307, 370, 605, 686.
Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 126.
Personal Explanation, ii. 646.
Plurality, i. 140, 198; ii. 370.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 324, 387.
Reports from Committees, i. 425, 483, 543, 553.
Time of Meeting, i. 380.
- Order, Question of. Vol. ii. 588-593, 595-597.
- PAIGE, JAMES W.
Distribution of the Debates of the Convention, Vol. ii. 686.
- PAINE, BENJAMIN.
Declination, Vol. i. 48.
Pardoning Power. Vol. i. 252, 502-512.
- PARKER, JOEL.
Amendments and Enrolment, Vol. ii. 465, 468, 470.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 42-44, 73, 74-82, 84, 85, 94, 95.
Closing Debate, i. 339.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 530.
Encouragement of Literature, ii. 156, 157, 484, 551, 554, 555, 628, 629, 633-635.
House of Representatives, i. 483-486.
Judiciary, ii. 284-288, 402.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 671.
Motions, i. 483; ii. 284, 285.
Plurality, i. 218, 224.
- Qualifications of Voters, i. 337, 347, 348, 353; ii. 133-135, 138, 142.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 546-548.
Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
University at Cambridge, ii. 333, 438.
- PARSONS, THOMAS A.
Berlin Vacancy, Vol. i. 44.
Frame of Government, i. 406, 407.
Judiciary, ii. 638, 639.
Militia, i. 518, 521, 522.
Place of Meeting, i. 44, 45.
Plurality, i. 122.
Pay Roll. Vol. i. 47, 83, 112, 255; ii. 41-45, 353, 374-376, 605, 606, 645, 646, 684, 685.
- PENNIMAN, JOHN.
Motions, Vol. i. 220.
Petitions, i. 220.
- PERKINS, DANIEL A.
Berlin Vacancy, Vol. i. 41.
Motions, i. 379; ii. 237, 635.
Plurality, i. 157; ii. 605.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 292, 346.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 379.
- Petitioning the Legislature. Vol. i. 282, 283.
Petitions to Convention. (See Memorials.)
- PHELPS, CHARLES.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 21.
Closing Debate, i. 318.
House of Representatives, i. 491; ii. 607, 608.
Orders, i. 252.
Qualifications of Voters, ii. 3, 4.
Time of Meeting, i. 380, 413.
- PHINNEY, SILVANUS B.
Adjournment, Vol. ii. 112.
House of Representatives, ii. 65.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 33.
Motions, i. 256, 359, 365, 381, 463; ii. 112, 123.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 371.
Place of Meeting. Vol. i. 6-16, 26, 27.
- PLUNKETT, WILLIAM C.
Banking, Vol. ii. 494.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 532.
Elections, i. 52, 53.
Motions, ii. 536, 628.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 652.
Plurality, Elections by. Vol. i. 45, 82, 121-163, 193-210, 211-225, 252, 447; ii. 17, 354-370, 377-395, 452-459, 593-605, 609-611.
Population, &c. Vol. i. 225, 226, 281.
- POWERS, PETER.
Orders, Vol. i. 186.
Prayer, Opening. Vol. i. 3.
Closing. Vol. ii. 688.
- Preliminary Business. Vol. i. 5-19, 163.
President, Election of. Vol. i. 4.
Address on taking the Chair of the Convention, i. 4, 5.
Address of, on final adjournment, ii. 688.
- Preservation of the Records. Vol. i. 6.
Printing. Vol. i. 17, 18, 34, 120.
Privileges, Special. Vol. i. 337, 338.
Property, Right to hold. Vol. i. 48.
- PUTNAM, JOHN A.
Motions, Vol. i. 493; ii. 124.
- Railroad Accidents. Vol. ii. 551, 552.
- RANTOUL, ROBERT.
Called Convention to Order, Vol. i. 3.
Census, ii. 74.
Election of President pro tem. of Convention, ii. 423.
Encouragement of Literature, ii. 156.
House of Representatives, i. 437-442.
Motions, i. 141; ii. 423.
New Towns, ii. 349.
Pay Roll, ii. 375.
Resolutions, i. 46.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 538, 570, 571.
University at Cambridge, ii. 330.

INDEX.

- Records, Preservation of. Vol. i. 6; ii. 386, 452, 636.
- REED, SAMPSON.
Leave of Absence, Vol. i. 210.
Registering of Deeds. Vol. i. 306.
Reporting. Vol. i. 73, 74, 83, 84, 404.
Representation, Plans of. Vol. i. 46, 48, 63, 112, 141, 232, 306, 403, 404, 434, 447, 448, 533, 590, 600, 629; ii. 1, 11, 55, 56, 69, 70, 72, 96, 97, 111, 113.
Resignations. Vol. i. 6, 53, 74, 112.
- RICE, DAVID.
Order, Vol. i. 63.
Rights, Declaration of. Vol. ii. 503-509, 525-551, 553-560, 567-578.
- ROCKWELL, JULIUS.
House of Representatives, Vol. i. 633, 634.
Petitions, i. 553.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 576, 577.
- ROCKWOOD, JOSEPH M.
Plan of Representation, Vol. i. 455.
- Roll Call. Vol. i. 413.
- Rules and Orders. Vol. i. 17, 27-33.
- SARGENT, JOHN.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 232.
Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 465.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 24.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 564, 565.
Corporations, ii. 337, 340.
Closing Debate, i. 211.
Distribution of Books, ii. 536.
Frame of Government, i. 497.
Encouragement of Literature, ii. 158.
Governor, i. 166.
House of Representatives, i. 448-452, 631, 632; ii. 614.
Lieutenant-Governor, i. 181, 268, 269, 279.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 25.
Militia, i. 571.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 647, 648, 679.
Motions, i. 447; ii. 465.
New Towns, ii. 351, 437.
Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 126.
Plurality, i. 133, 134, 211, 217.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 325, 363; ii. 129, 130, 132, 133, 136.
Rules and Orders, i. 29.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 396, 397.
Time of Meeting, i. 380, 381.
Contested Seat for Walpole, i. 57, 58.
- SCHOULER, WILLIAM.
Banking, Vol. ii. 479.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 95.
Closing Debate, i. 318; ii. 99.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 566, 582, 584-586.
Corporations, ii. 338-340, 343, 346, 396, 397.
Council, ii. 451.
Death of Mr. Gourgas, ii. 257.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 535, 554, 560.
Distribution of Debates, ii. 642.
Employing Reporters, i. 5, 6.
Frame of Government, i. 406, 412, 498.
Governor, i. 547.
Habeas Corpus, (see Declaration of Rights.)
House of Representatives, i. 437, 442-446, 491, 587; ii. 90, 91, 97, 100, 103, 109, 185, 189, 190, 615, 616, 621.
Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 562, 563, 635.
Judiciary, ii. 238, 240, 241, 416, 425, 432, 471.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 500, 502.
Lieutenant-Governor, i. 269, 287.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 316-318.
Militia, i. 570, 571, 573, 574.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 647, 649, 650, 658, 659, 668, 679.
Motions, i. 46, 104, 240, 319, 325, 495, 536; ii. 353, 423, 474, 554, 636.
New Towns, ii. 353, 434, 436, 437.
- Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 125, 126.
Orders, i. 153.
Pardoning Power, i. 504.
Pay Roll, ii. 374, 375.
Petitions, i. 58.
Place of Meeting, i. 13.
Plurality, i. 122-126, 149, 150, 156, 162, 163, 216, 221, 223, 225; ii. 358, 359, 365, 366, 369, 384, 385, 391, 392, 452, 598-601.
Plan of Representation, i. 600; ii. 97.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 296, 317, 324, 331-334, 352, 353, 393.
Question of Order, ii. 595-597.
Quorum of the House, ii. 308, 474.
Reporting Proceedings, i. 6, 74, 83, 84.
Rules and Orders, i. 28, 29.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 367, 395; ii. 153, 154.
Senate, i. 107, 108.
Time of Meeting, i. 381.
University at Cambridge, ii. 330.
Schools, Sectarian. Vol. i. 186; ii. 155-159, 377, 551, 554, 555, 628-635.
Seats, Assignment of. Vol. i. 53, 62, 67.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c. Vol. i. 253-256, 365-379, 394-405; ii. 73, 116-123, 144-153, 157.
Senate. Vol. i. 46, 48, 63, 98-104, 105, 110, 112-120, 577; ii. 656, 657.
Senators in Congress. Vol. i. 198, 199.
Sessions of Convention, two daily. Vol. i. 121, 153.
- SHELDON, LUTHER.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 120, 199.
House of Representatives, ii. 87, 90.
Judiciary, ii. 432.
Motions, i. 163, 199.
Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 126.
- SIMMONS, PEREZ.
Amendments and Enrolment, Vol. ii. 167, 464, 474.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 22.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 487, 581.
Elections, i. 52.
Motions, i. 7; ii. 464.
- SIMONDS, JOHN W.
Amendments and Enrolment, Vol. i. 156, 157; ii. 488, 489.
House of Representatives, i. 470.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 512.
Motions, i. 27, 470.
Pay Roll, ii. 43.
Plurality, i. 156.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 287, 288, 292.
Resolutions, i. 58.
Senate, i. 100, 109.
Time of Meeting, i. 27.
Speeches, Limitation of. Vol. i. 263, 264, 568, 579; ii. 99, 100, 285, 309, 310, 376, 377.
- SPRAGUE, PELEG.
Berlin Vacancy, Vol. i. 44.
Resignation, i. 74.
- SPOONER, SAMUEL W.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 120.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 530.
House of Representatives, i. 634, 635.
Militia, i. 514, 554.
Motions, ii. 45, 435.
New Towns, ii. 435.
Pay Roll, ii. 45.
Place of Meeting, i. 12, 120.
Plurality, i. 218; ii. 603.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 376.
State Prison Inspector. Vol. i. 176, 253, 365, 376, 405.
State Credit, Loan of the. Vol. i. 48, 141, 576, 577, 579; ii. 18-36, 205-228, 310-323.
- STETSON, CALEB.
Banking, Vol. ii. 483, 484, 492, 495.
Corporations, i. 581; ii. 4, 5, 9, 402.
Council, i. 277.
Closing Debate, i. 338, 534.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 561, 643.
Encouragement of Literature, ii. 155, 156.
- Frame of Government, i. 417, 495.
Governor, i. 164.
Habeas Corpus, (see Declaration of Rights.)
House of Representatives, i. 615, 643; ii. 66, 93, 150.
Judiciary, ii. 431.
Loan of the State Credit, i. 57 ii. 24, 205-207.
Militia, i. 568.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 676, 682.
Motions, i. 338, 381, 568, 644; ii. 76, 144, 159, 394, 431, 643.
New Towns, ii. 435, 436.
Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 124.
Orders, i. 359.
Pay Roll, ii. 43, 44.
Place of Meeting, i. 7, 34.
Plurality, i. 213; ii. 360, 455, 456.
Protest of Colored Citizens, ii. 686.
Resolutions, ii. 98.
Special Assignment, ii. 150.
University at Cambridge, ii. 348.
- STEVENS, CHARLES G.
House of Representatives, Vol. i. 600.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 578, 579; ii. 138, 142.
- STEVENS, GRANVILLE.
Judiciary, Vol. ii. 285.
Limitation of Debate, ii. 310.
Motions, ii. 285.
- STEVENS, JOSEPH L., JR.
Orders, Vol. i. 629.
- STEVENSON, J. THOMAS.
Constitutional Conventions, Vol. ii. 583.
Judiciary, ii. 429, 640.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 501-503.
Limitation of Debate, ii. 376, 377.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 223.
Motions, i. 447; ii. 429, 503, 509.
Plurality, i. 447; ii. 354-357, 595, 598, 599, 604.
Question of Order, ii. 588, 589, 595.
Reports from Committees, i. 447; ii. 508, 509.
- STORROW, CHARLES S.
Leave of Absence, Vol. i. 264, 317.
- STRONG, ALFRED L.
Imprisonment for Debt, Vol. ii. 519-523.
Judiciary, ii. 417.
Motions, ii. 521.
Orders, i. 48, 290.
- STUTSON, WILLIAM.
Presented Credentials, Vol. i. 97.
Suffrage. Vol. i. 463.
- SUMNER, CHARLES.
Constitutional Conventions, Vol. ii. 564.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 503-508, 526, 528, 530, 554.
House of Representatives, ii. 178-183, 192.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 319, 320.
Militia, i. 551, 552, 563-565.
Reports from Committees, i. 273; ii. 204, 205.
Resolutions, i. 283.
- SUMNER, INCREASE.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 20.
Closing Debate, i. 253.
Frame of Government, i. 416.
Governor, i. 163, 166, 174.
Hour of Meeting, i. 414.
Judiciary, ii. 231, 414, 423, 424.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 217, 218.
Motions, i. 254; ii. 382.
Orders, i. 120.
Pardoning Power, i. 507.
Printing, i. 120, 129.
Plurality, ii. 382.
Qualifications of Voters, ii. 130, 131.
Resolutions, i. 91, 552, 553.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 540, 541.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 254; ii. 117, 118.
- SWAIN, ALANSON.
Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 623.

INDEX.

- TABER, ISAAC C.
Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 168.
- TAFT, ARNOLD.
Leave of Absence, Vol. i. 121, 318.
- Tax Qualification. Vol. i. 48, 233.
- TAYLOR, RALPH.
Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 484.
- THOMAS, JOHN W.
Berlin Vacancy, Vol. i. 22, 25.
Encouragement of Literature, ii. 633.
Judiciary, ii. 431.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 321.
Motions, i. 11, 22, 53; ii. 44, 321, 431, 633.
Orders, i. 24.
Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
- THOMPSON, CHARLES.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 153, 252, 289; ii. 580.
Assignment of Seats, i. 67.
Closing Debate, i. 318, 534, 643.
Death of Mr. Gourgas, ii. 259.
House of Representatives, i. 643, 645; ii. 1, 69-71, 91.
Judiciary, ii. 285.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 501.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 228, 310, 311.
Messenger, i. 27, 34.
Memorials, i. 16.
Motions, i. 34, 98, 112, 129, 153, 176, 328, 339, 364, 455; ii. 1, 44, 167, 228, 259, 395.
New Towns, ii. 395, 436.
Orders, i. 16, 47, 97.
Organization, i. 5.
Pardoning Power, i. 507.
Pay Roll, ii. 45.
Plan of Representation, i. 629; ii. 1.
Place of Meeting, i. 36, 37.
Preliminary Business, i. 5.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 362, 363.
Rules and Orders, i. 27, 29.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 367, 394.
Time of Meeting, i. 414.
- TILTON, HORATIO W.
Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 623.
- TOWER, EPHRAIM.
Petitions, Vol. i. 154.
- Towns, Incorporation of. Vol. i. 153; ii. 349-354, 434-437.
- Towns, Population of, &c. Vol. i. 47, 97, 98.
- Towns, List of. Vol. i. 92, 97, 98, 176.
- TRAIN, CHARLES R.
Berlin Vacancy, Vol. i. 59, 60, 65, 66.
Council, i. 230, 275; ii. 449.
Distribution of the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 641.
Judiciary, ii. 416, 635-637.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 502.
Lieutenant-Governor, i. 179, 182.
Motions, i. 53; ii. 384, 502, 609, 610, 636.
Orders, i. 63.
Plurality, i. 159, 160, 193, 218; ii. 385, 389, 593, 597, 602-605, 609.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 569, 570.
- TURNER, DAVID.
Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 623.
- TYLER, WILLIAM.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 232, 239.
Appendix to Report of Debates, ii. 423, 447.
Closing Debate, i. 273.
Encouragement of Literature, ii. 124, 155.
Governor, i. 177.
Lieutenant-Governor, i. 231.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 35.
Motions, ii. 45, 447.
Orders, i. 206; ii. 423.
Pay Roll, ii. 43.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 286, 287, 289, 349, 350.
- UNDERWOOD, ORISON.
Distribution of the Report of Debates, Vol. ii. 641, 685.
- House of Representatives, i. 232.
Judiciary, ii. 418.
Militia, i. 570.
Motions, i. 210, 232, 404; ii. 21, 60, 361.
Question of Order, ii. 644.
Resolutions, i. 232.
- University at Cambridge. Vol. i. 63, 74, 82, 97, 629; ii. 98, 228, 249, 250, 323-334, 348, 349, 437-448.
- UPHAM, CHARLES W.
Encouragement of Literature, Vol. ii. 158, 159.
House of Representatives, i. 606-611.
- UPTON, GEORGE B.
Amendments and Enrolment, Vol. ii. 465, 466, 487, 488.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 44.
Closing Debate, i. 338.
Council, i. 263, 277; ii. 451.
Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 238, 239, 263, 280.
Corporations, ii. 13.
Distribution of Debates, ii. 643.
Frame of Government, i. 417, 497, 498.
House of Representatives, ii. 37-39, 48, 624, 625.
Judiciary, ii. 418, 419.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 655.
Motions, i. 325; ii. 377, 464.
New Towns, ii. 353, 437.
Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 124, 125.
Pardoning Power, i. 512.
Place of Meeting, i. 19, 33.
Plurality, ii. 377, 593, 598, 605.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 324, 325, 345, 346, 358.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 398-400.
- Vacancy, Berlin. Vol. i. 17, 22-25, 37-44, 46-51, 53, 59-62, 64-82, 84-97, 176.
Vacancy, Boston. Vol. i. 47, 74.
Vacancy, Concord. Vol. ii. 285, 374.
Vacancies, General. Vol. i. 6, 37-44, 67, 230.
- VILES, JOEL.
Plan of Representation, Vol. ii. 72.
Viva Voce Vote. Vol. i. 3, 82, 282, 296.
Vote on Act calling Convention, ii. 690-692.
on Constitutional Propositions, ii. 702-708.
Votes, Counting and Recording of. Vol. i. 282; ii. 474, 510, 511.
Voters, List of. Vol. i. 368; ii. 670.
Voters, Qualifications of. Vol. i. 58, 98, 105, 176, 178, 283-337, 339-365, 381-394, 533, 577-579, 600; ii. 3, 4, 14-17, 127-143, 214, 250-257, 260-266, 276, 323.
- WALCOTT, SAMUEL B.
Berlin Vacancy, Vol. i. 50, 51.
Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 246, 247.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 404.
- WALLES, BRADFORD L.
Declaration of Rights, Vol. ii. 560.
Motions, ii. 560.
- WALLACE, FREDERICK T.
Orders, Vol. i. 63.
Senate, i. 106, 107.
- WALKER, AMASA.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 21, 104.
Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 165.
Banking, ii. 480-483.
Census, ii. 74, 75.
Closing Debate, i. 338.
Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 245, 266, 271, 277.
Corporations, ii. 339-341.
Death of Mr. Gourgas, ii. 257.
Distribution of the Amended Constitution, &c., ii. 536, 637, 641, 646.
Distribution of the Report of Debates, ii. 641, 646, 685.
Encouragement of Literature, ii. 144, 158.
Frame of Government, i. 409.
House of Representatives, i. 467-468, 546, 624, 629; ii. 80, 94.
- Judiciary, ii. 294, 509, 639.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 516.
Lieutenant-Governor, (see Council.)
Limiting Debate, ii. 310.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 34, 35.
Militia, i. 525, 526, 528, 559, 560.
Motions, i. 121, 325, 338; ii. 22, 127, 214, 250, 499, 550, 637, 685, 688.
Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 125.
Orders, i. 6, 92; ii. 637, 641.
Place of Meeting, i. 5-7, 11, 13, 25, 34.
Plurality, i. 121, 122-124, 158, 199, 207, 208; ii. 365-367, 456, 457, 598, 601, 602.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 112, 290, 308-311, 323, 325, 333, 334, 354, 358, 359; ii. 129, 134, 138, 141, 142, 214, 250, 264, 265.
Reports from Committees, i. 6, 98, 502, 533, 553, 600; ii. 98, 99, 143, 144, 646.
Resolutions, i. 470.
Rights of the Jury, ii. 556.
- WARD, ANDREW H.
Declination, Vol. i. 47.
Encouragement of Literature, ii. 632.
Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 521.
Judiciary, ii. 432.
Motions, i. 128; ii. 127, 521.
Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 127.
Plurality, i. 129.
Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)
- WALKER, SAMUEL.
Justices of the Peace, Vol. i. 255.
- WARNER, MARSHAL.
Leave of Absence, Vol. ii. 623.
- WARNER, SAMUEL, JR.
Declination, Vol. i. 141.
Judiciary, ii. 229, 230, 234.
Motions, i. 176, 470; ii. 124, 229.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 471.
- WATERS, ASA H.
Berlin Vacancy, Vol. i. 25.
Corporations, ii. 399-402.
House of Representatives, i. 639, 640.
Justices of the Peace, i. 254, 255; ii. 513, 514.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 671.
Motions, i. 577; ii. 592.
Orders, i. 105, 175.
Printing, i. 120.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 254, 255.
- WEEKS, CYRUS.
House of Representatives, Vol. ii. 68.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 24, 33, 218.
Motions, i. 230, 232; ii. 17, 115, 605.
Petitions, i. 493.
Printing, ii. 682.
- WESTON, GERSHOM B.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 280, 289, 502.
Closing Debate, i. 644; ii. 496, 497, 499.
House of Representatives, i. 644; ii. 36, 37.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 486, 501, 502.
Motions, i. 26, 277, 345, 419; ii. 144, 329, 492, 496, 497, 499.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 345, 353.
Question of Order, ii. 597.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 394, 463.
Time and Place of Meeting, i. 26.
University at Cambridge, ii. 329.
- WHEELER, WILLIAM F.
Adjournment, Vol. i. 631.
Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 244, 245.
Closing Debate, i. 644.
Governor, i. 176.
House of Representatives, ii. 31.
Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 567.
Judiciary, ii. 432, 433.
Motions, i. 631; ii. 375, 388, 433, 625, 667.
Orders, i. 198; ii. 60.
Pay Roll, ii. 376.
Senators in Congress, i. 199.

INDEX.

WHITE, GEORGE.

Encouragement of Literature, Vol. ii. 628, 635.
House of Representatives, i. 447, 448; ii. 94-97, 214, 228.
Motions, i. 645; ii. 214, 228, 237, 556.
Plan of Representation, i. 447, 448.
Plurality, i. 206, 207.
Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)

WHITNEY, DANIEL S.

Adjournment, Vol. i. 232, 252.
Appointing Members of Legislature to Office, ii. 640.
Closing Debate, i. 318, 535; ii. 447.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 586.
Corporations, ii. 346.
Council, i. 262; ii. 448.
Declaration of Rights, ii. 529.
Distribution of Debates, ii. 642.
Frame of Government, i. 417.
Governor, i. 172.
House of Representatives, i. 632, 633; ii. 57, 609.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 502, 518.
Limiting Debate, ii. 457.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 35, 36.
Militia, i. 547-550, 553-555; ii. 2.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 668, 682.
Motions, ii. 26, 237.
Oaths and Subscriptions, i. 192; ii. 127, 161.
Orders, i. 379, 437.
Place of Meeting, i. 26, 36.
Pardoning Power, i. 508.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 296, 297; ii. 237, 255, 256.

WHITNEY, JAMES S.

Adjournment, Vol. i. 154.
Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 248.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 24, 25.
Closing Debate, i. 273.
Corporations, i. 579-581; ii. 4-7, 12-14, 342-346, 402.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 582.
Encouragement of Literature, ii. 633.
House of Representatives, i. 624, 625; ii. 619, 620.
Judiciary, ii. 415, 430.
Justices of the Peace, ii. 517.
Motions, i. 273, 419; ii. 11, 115, 214, 228, 266, 335, 430, 590.
Orders, i. 24, 74.
Plurality, ii. 382-385, 393, 394, 599-602, 605.
Question of Order, ii. 590.
Quorum of the House, ii. 308.
Reports, i. 220.
Rules and Orders, i. 29.
Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 375-377, 399, 400.
Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)

WILKINS, JOHN H.

Boston Vacancy, Vol. i. 47.
Census, ii. 74.
Frame of Government, i. 414.
House of Representatives, i. 12, 40.
Lieutenant-Governor, i. 176, 179, 180, 267, 269, 278.
Loan of the State Credit, ii. 312-315.
Militia, i. 515, 516.

Motions, i. 176.

Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 376, 378, 395-398.

WILKINSON, EZRA.

House of Representatives, Vol. ii. 40, 41.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 659, 678.
Motions, i. 280; ii. 660, 678.
Qualifications of Voters, ii. 137, 138, 141, 143.

WILLIAMS, HENRY.

Choice of Secretary, Vol. i. 3, 4.
Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 676.
Motions, ii. 676.
Orders, i. 506.
Qualifications of Voters, i. 233-236.

WILSON, HENRY.

Adjournment, Vol. i. 6, 22, 141, 140, 153, 176, 338, 630; ii. 645.
Amendments and Enrolment, ii. 245, 373, 374, 554.
Berlin Vacancy, i. 24, 92-95.
Chosen President pro tempore of Convention, ii. 423.
Closing Debate, i. 253, 533-536; ii. 99.
Commonwealth of Massachusetts, i. 178.
Contested Seat of Delegate for Walpole, i. 56.
Corporations, ii. 7-10.
Council and Lieutenant-Governor, i. 247, 248.
Constitutional Conventions, ii. 554, 582-584.
Death of Mr. Gourgas, ii. 257.

Declaration of Rights, ii. 504, 508, 527, 558, 559.

Encouragement of Literature, ii. 144, 156.

Final Adjournment, ii. 688.

Frame of Government, i. 178, 407, 408, 412.

Governor, i. 164-168, 174.

Habeas Corpus, (see Declarations of Rights.)

House of Representatives, ii. 92, 93, 162, 163, 555, 609, 611-613, 620, 621, 626.

Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 563, 635.

Instructing Committees, i. 394, 516.

Judiciary, ii. 228, 229, 238-240, 272.

Lieutenant-Governor, i. 179, 180, 182, 267, 268, 279, 280.

Loan of the State Credit, ii. 25-27, 32, 316.

Militia, i. 516-518, 525, 531, 533, 550-559, 563, 564, 575, 576.

Mode of Submitting the Amended Constitution to the People, ii. 664, 676.

Motions, i. 6, 17, 81, 82, 105, 128, 192, 210, 211, 219, 253, 273, 281, 282, 290, 326, 365, 376, 394, 405, 463, 502, 506, 512, 516, 517, 533, 553, 574, 575, 576, 577, 579, 582; ii. 3, 4, 18, 22, 72, 73, 76, 123, 124, 127, 144, 154, 155, 168, 204, 214, 228, 285, 323, 335, 349, 351, 374, 386, 504, 533, 536, 550, 554, 556, 567, 587, 609, 628, 644, 645, 646.

New Towns, ii. 349, 350.

Oaths and Subscriptions, ii. 124-126, 161, 162.

Orders, i. 6, 27, 47, 49, 53, 74, 82, 105, 140, 176, 198, 230, 263, 379, 380, 600; ii. 235, 361.

Pardoning Power, i. 505.

Pay Roll, ii. 374-376, 645.

Petitions, i. 58, 82.

Place of Meeting, i. 8, 11, 19, 22, 33.

Plurality, i. 151, 180-182, 214, 215, 223; ii. 369, 384, 387, 388, 391, 587, 588, 594, 609.

Population and Representation, i. 231.

Preliminary Business, i. 5.

Qualifications of Voters, i. 301-304, 336, 384, 385.

Question of Order, ii. 588-590, 644, 645.

Reports from Committees, i. 17, 63.

Resignation as Delegate for Berlin, i. 6.

Resolutions, i. 5, 18, 174, 286, 553.

Rights of the Jury, ii. 536.

Rules and Orders, i. 31.

Senate, i. 63, 98, 99, 101, 109.

Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 367, 376, 398; ii. 116, 147, 148, 155.

Special Assignment, ii. 162, 163.

University at Cambridge, ii. 331, 348, 437, 438, 441-445.

WILSON, MILO.

Loan of the State Credit, Vol. i. 576; ii. 213.

New Towns, ii. 352.

Women, Married, Property of, Vol. i. 256; ii. 72.

WOOD, NATHANIEL.

Berlin Vacancy, Vol. i. 25.

Closing Debate, ii. 361.

Encouragement of Literature, ii. 144, 630, 634.

House of Representatives, i. 481-483; ii. 172.

Justices of the Peace, ii. 498, 499.

Limitation of Debate, ii. 361.

Motions, i. 27, 471; ii. 203, 637.

Pardoning Power, i. 511, 512.

Place of Meeting, i. 11.

Qualifications of Voters, ii. 137.

Secretary, Treasurer, &c., ii. 144, 145.

Sectarian Schools, (see Encouragement of Literature.)

WOOD, WILLIAM H.

House of Representatives, Vol. i. 446, 447; ii. 172.

Judiciary, ii. 235, 236, 243, 244.

WRIGHT, EZEKIEL.

Petitions, Vol. i. 517.

Yeas and Nays on Form of Notice to Town of Berlin, Vol. i. 95-97.

on the Senate, i. 119, 120.

on the Governor, i. 177, 178.

on the Council, i. 275, 276.

on Qualifications of Voters, i. 353, 354, 364, 365, 386, 387.

on Secretary, Treasurer, &c., i. 404, 405.

on the General Court, i. 501, 502.

on the Pay Roll, ii. 44, 45.

on the House of Representatives, ii. 91, 92, 110, 114-116, 202-204.

on Loan of the State Credit, ii. 227, 228, 322, 323.

on the Judiciary, ii. 303-305.

on General Laws for Corporations, ii. 347, 348.

on Plurality, ii. 379, 386, 387, 457-459, 610.

on the Judiciary, ii. 423-433.

on the University at Cambridge, ii. 446.

on Banking, ii. 496.

on Imprisonment for Debt, ii. 524, 525.

on the Bill of Rights, ii. 533, 534, 550, 551.

on Amendments to Constitution, ii. 566, 567, 580, 581.

on Rights of the Jury, ii. 577, 578.

on a Question of Order, ii. 592, 593.

on Adjournment, ii. 594, 595.

on the House of Representatives, ii. 627, 628, 662.

on Revision, ii. 678, 679.

on Proposition Number One, ii. 679, 680.

342.744
+C 7660
Massachusetts. Constitutional convention, 1853. Official

342.744
+C 7660

